

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

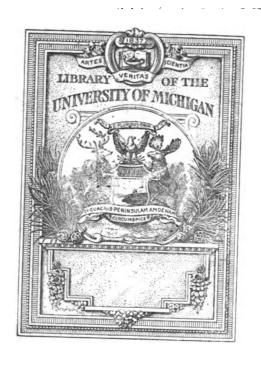

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

MUSIC AND MIRACLES.

A miracle is that which appears to defy the Laws of Possession of perfect touch and technique in Nature. piano playing has hitherto been so rare as almost to be accounted miraculous. The discovery of a new law often brings miracles down to the realms of science, however; and the discovery by Mr. Macdonald Smith of the law governing muscular control has done this for piano playing. His System "From Brain to Keyboard" is merely scientific, just as wireless telegraphy is, although pupils frequently describe results as "miraculous." "Light on Pianoforte Playing," sent free by Mr. M. Macdonald Smith, 19, Bloomsbury Square, W.C., describes the principles on which his well-known System, already taught to over 3,000 pianists of every degree of proficiency, in all parts of the world, is based.

In my own Course for Beginners I have used a small part of his scientific method of sight-reading with a success that has surprised even myself. Mr. Ehremayer knows more about the real problems involved in music teaching than anyone I have met."

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful-to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et catera.

MISCHA ELMAN.

Of all musical instruments the violin is the most wonderful, especially when we consider its Four strings, stretched over a potentialities. wooden box, set into vibration with a stick on which is stretched a wisp of hair, and there it is! But think of what this simply constructed instrument may become in the hands of a master —the depth of its expression, the tenderness of its tones. Hardly less remarkable is the fact that in this age of change the violin has remained unchanged for three hundred years. And how wonderful have been the performances of the great violinists: to name two of the greatest, Paganini and Joachim. Who, like them, will be placed high up on the roll of fame? Time alone can answer this question; but there is good reason to think that a place will be found for the gifted boy-violinist who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Mischa Jakob Elman was born January 21 (English style), 1891, at Talnoje, a small town in the district of Kieff, Russia. His grandfather was a noted violinist in that part; his father, a schoolmaster, not overburdened with this world's goods. At a very early age the boy—the eldest child and only son of the family—used to play on a quarter-size violin, in imitation of his father. At the age of five he played at a concert before the Princess Ourosov, President and owner of Talnoje, whereupon this lady offered to pay for his education and adopt him if he would renounce the Judaic faith and become a Christian. 'You have a great fortune in that boy,' she said to his father. 'You are so rich, and I am so poor,' he replied; 'if, Madam, I have one little fortune, why do you want to take it from me?' Although the offer was declined, it made such an impression upon the father that he determined to sell his little bit of property and remove to Odessa for the benefit of his son's musical education.

In the month of May, 1896, Mischa, aged five, became a student at the Imperial School of Music at Odessa, his teacher of the violin being Prof. Alexander Fiedelmann, a distinguished oupil of Dr. Brodsky. The boy duly appeared pefore the Board of Examiners, M. Emil Mlynarski being chief of the violin department. Until he entered the room Mischa had never before seen a pianoforte! The floor was so slippery and he so nervous and frightened that he tumbled lown, fiddle and all, but the moment he put the and the Elman family removed to St. Petersburg. now to his violin he recovered himself. On being Although there was great rivalry between Mischa ue question 'How long have you learnt the ahead that violin?' the answer came, 'Five years'! Some competitors.

ladies on the Council of the School said, 'We have never before had so young a student: why should we force a child like this to work?' The director replied, 'We shall never have to work this boy: he will become an honour to our School.' Mischa was accepted as a free pupil at the School, but his father had to maintain him; and for the sake of the boy the family suffered great privations during their residence in Odessa. In November, 1902, Prof. Auer, then on a professional tour in South Russia, heard the lad play and was so greatly struck with his wonderful talent that he agreed to take him as a pupil if he could obtain the permission of the Czar for Mischa and his family to reside in St. Petersburg, as no Jew born outside the city was allowed to live either in the Russian capital or in Moscow. The requisite permission was obtained by Prof. Auer, head of the violin classes of the St. Petersburg Conservatoire, but not without considerable difficulty. 'If you won't let me have the best pupil ever offered to me,' said Auer to the authorities, 'I will resign my appointment.' Permission was then given for the boy alone to remain at St. Petersburg, but Auer would not agree to this, as he said 'The father will help me to make the boy.' In the end Auer accepted him as a free pupil at the Conservatoire, sked his age, he replied 'Three months,' and to and another student, the former so rapidly shot he soon out-distanced all his stir in the world. To Prof. Auer the critics a concert.' class who can play this boy's head off.' 'Why 'it is easy enough to make such a statement, but let us hear him.' Arrangements were accordingly made for Mischa to appear at the Deutscher Liedertafel, the most important musical Society in St. Petersburg. Now, it had always been the prerogative of Auer to play at this, the opening meeting of the season. On this occasion, however, he sent a message saying that he was too unwell to play. The president, in a little speech, regretted the reason of Prof. Auer's inability to play, but announced that he had sent his youngest pupil who he felt had the right, by reason of his ability, to take his place. After referring to the service which Auer had rendered to the Society, the president went on to say that the distinguished professor was present as a listener, adding that he (the president) rejoiced that the king and his successor had met, for it was not often given to crowned heads to witness the coronation of their successors! Great was the astonishment, not to say amusement, of the audience when a little fellow of thirteen appeared as Auer's substitute! Mischa played the Mendelssohn concerto (with pianoforte accompaniment), one of Chopin's Nocturnes, and Paganini's 'Moto perpetuo,' and with such success that the little fiddler was then and there engaged by a German concert-agent, who was present, to play in Berlin.

On October 12, 1904, Mischa and his father arrived at Berlin. There they narrowly escaped death by asphyxiation at the hotel where they had passed the night. It had been arranged that at noon the next day the boy should play privately before a select audience of musical critics and As the youthful violinist did not arrive, the agent hastened to the hotel to find Elman and his father almost in a state of collapse. doctors managed to restore consciousness, but it was feared that the boy would be unable to play. With rare pluck, however, he pulled himself together, saying, 'I must play: my future depends upon it, and I cannot disappoint them.' He treated his select audience to the Bach chaconne, and then said, 'I cannot play any more,' and left the platform crying. The next day he was well enough to play before Joachim, and on the following day he gave his first public recital.

After a concert tour in Germany-Dresden, Hamburg, Düsseldorf, Frankfort, Hanover, and Leipzig—in the autumn of 1904, a German impresario came to Mr. Daniel Mayer, now the well-known concert agent in London, giving him an account of a wonderful boy fiddler. At that time Mr. L. G. Sharpe, the concert agent, inquired of

In October, 1904, a violinist prodigy came to worthy of your enterprise—a marvellous boy St. Petersburg who at that time had made a great fiddler, but he will cost you 120 guineas for Mr. Charles Williams, on whose said, 'Have you ever heard anything like this behalf Mr. Sharpe was arranging a series of before?' 'Yes,' he replied, 'I have a pupil in my five orchestral concerts, happened to be in the office when the telephone message arrived, and he then, do you not produce him?' they inquired; then and there closed with the offer, this being the largest fee that had hitherto been known for an instrumental performer's first appearance in London. The result was that Mischa made his English début at the concert given and conducted by Mr. Charles Williams at Queen's Hall, on March 21, 1905. On that memorable occasion he played Tchaikovsky's concerto in a most masterly manner, not only with faultless technique, but with perfect phrasing and poetic insight, rare even in an artist of high repute. He was at once engaged for two more concerts. At the first of these he played the Mendelssohn concerto and Saint-Saëns's 'Introduction et Rondo Capriccioso,' and at the third, Max Bruch's G minor Concerto, all these being accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Charles Williams. Those who were fortunate enough to be present these concerts will remember with what wonderment they listened to the extraordinary interpretations of the child-performer as he stood there in his white knickerbocker suit and played with all the maturity of a great artist.

Having conquered London, Mischa achieved his next success in Paris. He made his first appearance in the French capital at his own concert given at the Salle des Agriculteurs on April 2, 1905. In pieces by Bach, Paganini, and Saint-Saëns, he created quite a sensation, and was welcomed with extraordinary enthusiasm. He also played at a Colonne concert, an event which recalls an interesting incident related by Mr. Elman, Mischa's father, in connection with his son's St. Petersburg period. M. Colonne conducted an important orchestral concert in the Russian capital in 1904, at which Mischa, anxious to play in public with the orchestra, offered to play without fee. This was agreed to. But when at the rehearsal M. Colonne called for the soloist and a small boy appeared carrying his violin, the great French conductor exclaimed in tones of indignant astonishment, 'What! this is an insult to me. I have conducted for the greatest artists, but never before have I received such an insult.' M. Colonne was urged to hear the boy. 'Hear him,' he replied, 'No, I will not: he must play with pianoforte accompaniment only.' When at night the concert took place, and after Mischa had played Wieniawski's 'Faust' fantasia, M. Colonne, himself a violinist, made his way to the platform and said to the boy, 'I owe you an apology; I should have considered it an honour to have conducted the orchestra with such a player. My orchestra in Paris is at your disposal, and I will give you a fee never before Mr. Mayer if a celebrated pianist was likely to be in known there.' M. Colonne fulfilled his promise England in March, 1905. 'No,' was the reply on in rather a curious manner. The only concert the telephone, 'but I can offer you the biggest that was available in Paris was the last of the thing that has ever been known, one that is quite season, and that was a Wagner concert; therefore it contained no violin solos. M. Colonne played better than you did this evening. thereupon announced that instead of the usual interval, Mischa would play Mendelssohn's Violin This unprecedented encroachment upon the entracte raised a storm of opposition; letters were received by the conductor in which he was called a charlatan for putting Mendelssohn in a Wagner programme. Moreover, there was quite a scene at the concert—whistling and other disturbing noises. As soon as quietness had been restored, M. Colonne said: 'I have not interfered with Wagner, but I have given you an extra piece in the concert: if you don't wish to hear it, you can go outside.' The result was that the performance of the Mendelssohn concerto aroused so much enthusiasm that Mischa had to play no fewer than six encore pieces!

Mischa Elman plays on a fine Amati violin. His répertoire is very large, e.g. :

Concertos. - Bach in A minor; Brahms; Bruch in G minor and D minor; Beethoven; Glazounoff in A minor; Lalo in D minor; Mendelssohn; Mozart in A; Paganini in D; Spohr in A minor (Gesangscene); Saint-Saëns in B minor; Tchaikovsky; Viotti in A minor, No. 22; Wieniawski, &c. Concertstücke. — Romances in F and G, Beethoven; Mélodies Hongroises and Othello Fantasia, Ernst; Suite, Mackenzie; Suite in A minor, Sinding; Rondo Capriccioso, Saint-Saëns; Faust Fantasia, Wieniawski, &c.

Sonatas. — Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Corelli, Grieg, Handel, Mozart, Senaille, and Tartini.

In addition to the foregoing the répertoire contains a large number of smaller pieces by composers of various nationalities.

Mischa Elman has had the great distinction of appearing—as a boy, be it noted—at the Birmingham Festival (1906), the Gloucester Festival (1907), the Lower Rhine Festival, conducted by Steinbach (1907), and for two seasons in succession—an almost unprecedented honour—of playing at the Gewandhaus Concerts, Leipzig.

One very remarkable thing about Mischa's playing, especially in one so young, is the various moods with which he interprets compositions of opposite character. The concertos of Beethoven, Brahms and Tchaikovsky—how different their atmosphere, and yet young Elman breathes, so to speak, the natural air of each one as he plays with marvellous technique, absolute certainty (always from memory) and rare poetic insight, these masterpieces. He has played under the baton of all the great conductors in Europe. The testimony of two of the most distinguished may be quoted. Herr Arthur Nikisch became so enthusiastic at the close of a rehearsal of the Tchaikovsky concerto that he said: 'Now, my dear Mischa, if only at the concert you will play that as well as you have done now, I could not wish it to be played better.' After the concert he said: 'You played the concerto twice as well as at the rehearsal; I never thought it could be played like that.' And then what did Dr. Richter say in regard to the Brahms concerto? Going into the artists' room after he had conducted a Strauss tone-poem, he rushed up to the boy and said: 'Beautiful-you may Remain as pure and unspoiled in music as you are to-night.'

The Elman family now permanently reside in London. Mr. Elman entirely devotes himself to his gifted son. In the artists' room at concerts he plays in imagination every note that Mischa plays, thus showing his sympathy with the boy. Mischa has a great love for English audiences—'They are so responsive,' he says. When Mischa first came here Mr. Daniel Mayer was summoned by the police for allowing him, a boy under the prescribed age, to play in public at an evening performance without a magistrate's order: however, an official copy of the boy's birth certificate, obtained from Russia, satisfied the police, and the summons was withdrawn.

He has played at Court, once during the visit of the King and Queen of Spain. King Edwardgenially chatted with the boy for ten minutes about his career, evincing the greatest interest in him and his performances: he has also several times played before Queen Alexandra. Asked as to his hobbies, Mischa replies, 'motoring.' A motor car is the only luxury in which the Elman family indulge, as they live very quietly in their modest house. In regard to English music, Mischa says, 'I greatly admire Elgar; my only regret is that Elgar has not written more for the violin. I wish he would compose a concerto for me, it would be a great success.

Although this gifted youth has hitherto only played in Europe, he is eagerly awaited in America and Australia. To both continents he hopes soon to go, and thereby add to the fame which his genius so fully merits.

No more appropriate conclusion to this biographical sketch of Mischa Elman could be found than a repetition of the words addressed to him by Dr. Richter: 'Beautiful-you may be proud, my dear Elman; no one could have played better than you did this evening. Remain as pure and unspoiled in music as you are to-night.'

THE BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

I.—PRINTED MUSIC.

In drawing attention to a few of the musical treasures preserved at the British Museum, two things should be taken into consideration: first, that the collection of books is of comparatively recent growth and that the music section was formerly much neglected; and secondly, that the nation's possessions at Great Russell Street have all been legitimately acquired. As the former of these conditions has already been dwelt upon, it only remains to say a few words on the 'secondly.' Unlike the national libraries of other countriesfor instance, the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris or the Royal Hof- und Staatsbibliothek at Munich -the British Museum has not been enriched by be proud, my dear Elman; no one could have spoil, such as the confiscation of monasteries and so forth; as Dr. Fortescue, Keeper of the Printed Books, remarked to the present writer, 'We have always been perfectly honest in acquiring our possessions.' Therefore, taking these things into consideration, it is all the more to the credit of those who control the various sections of the National Library that the collection is so splendid in its vastness no less than in its importance as one of the greatest in the world. Such a precious possession is one of which every subject of the King should be proud.

Coming to the musical books themselves, it is not an easy thing to make a selection of the rarities in the British Museum Library, nor to adopt any classification that would satisfy a deepdyed bibliophile; as, however, this chit-chat—for it claims no further pretensions—is intended for the general reader, a more or less haphazard arrangement may be excused. The place of honour must be given to our own country, and at the outset it is pleasant to record an earlier example of English printed music than is generally assumed. It is a mere 'fragment'—one leaf only, and that much stained—containing part of the music and the last four stanzas of an anonymous ballad, printed by John Rastell, a lawyer and a Member of Parliament, who died in 1536. The poem, printed in black letter, concludes with a reference to the 'fayre ryddance' of a 'shrew wyfe.'

A facsimile of this specimen of early English printed music is given on p. 14. As Mr. Barclay Squire assigns the approximate date of '1520?' to this 'fragment,' it is earlier than the next treasure to be described, one that hitherto has been regarded as the first music-book printed in England. This old-world tome is from the famous printing press of Wynkyn de Worde, Caxton's apprentice, and contains the bass and part of the treble part of a collection of English songs. It is dated 1530, and begins:

BASSUS. In this boke ar coteynyd. xx. soges. ix of iiii. ptes and xi. of thre ptes. [Then follow, in two columns, the titles and authors of the songs.] Anno dni. M.ccccc.xxx. Decimo die mensis Octobris.

Further particulars of this rare and interesting tome are obtained from the official 'catalogue slip,' which we are permitted to transcribe:

45 folios, without pagination. Title-page signatures A_L, in fours. The printed notes stop on the recto of folio 14, the verso contains printed lines, with music in MS. 2 folios entirely in MS follow, and then 4 unsigned folios with printed lines and MS music; a blank leaf at the end. Bound up with this Bassus part is the first leaf of the Triplex.

The composers named in this collection are: Cornysh, Piggot, Ashwell, Tavener, Gwynneth, Fayrfax, Cowper, Jones, and Thomes Stretton, the last named in the MS portion only.

A specimen page from Wynkyn de Worde's book is reproduced in facsimile on p. 15.

Like the 'fragment' of Rastell described above, which is obsanother early specimen of English musical as followeth.

typography is contained in an octavo book supposed to have been printed by J. Gough, in London, in 1539. It is a play, and begins:

A new interlude and a mery of the nature of the . iiij. elements declarynge many proper poijnts of phylosophy naturall, and of dyuers straunge landys, and of dyuers straunge effects & causis, etc.

This octavo book contains a few MS. notes; it is imperfect and without pagination. On sig. E 5-5 is a three-part song (soprano, tenor, and bass) beginning: 'Tyme to pas with goodly sport.' The music occupies three pages. Other parts of this incomplete volume, printed in black letter, contain music-staves left blank for notes to be written in.

Of supreme importance is the book so worthily associated with John Merbecke (or Marbeck), organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, in the 16th century. It bears the simple title:

The booke | of Common | praier noted. | 1550.

The colophon reads:

Imprinted by Richard Grafton printer to the Kinges Maiestie 1550. Cum priuilegio ad imprimendum solum.

In this book, printed throughout in black letter, the four lines of the stave are printed in red, while the square notes are black, and each note appears to be a separate type. The facsimile (on p. 16) from the book is the printer's explanation of the four kinds of notes that are used. Burney says that the 'strene' note means 'strained, or stretched out, perhaps from its being the longest note used in chanting. Junius makes strene and strain synonymous.' Under the guidance of Archbishop Cranmer, Merbecke, in 1550, adapted the ancient Plainsong to the English Service, including the preces, prayers, and responses, also 'at the Communion' and 'at the buriall of the dead,' noted word for word throughout according to the First Prayer-Book of Edward VI., issued in the previous year, 1549. The following are some of the differences between this (the Merbecke) and the Prayer Book in use at the present day:

> O lorde open thou my lippes. And my mouth shal shew forth thy praise.

O God make spede to saue me. O lorde make hast to helpe me.

The Te Deum begins: 'We prayse the o lorde, we knowlege the to be the lorde.'

The next book in our survey is of quite a different nature from that just mentioned. Written by George Turberville, the poet, and issued in 1575, it is entitled:

The Noble Arte of Venerie or Hvnting. Wherein is handled and set out the Vertues, Nature, and Properties of fluetene sundrie Chaces togither, with the order and maner how to Hunte and kill every one of them.

At the end of the book are four pages of music, headed:

The measures of blowing set downe in the notes for the more ease and ready help of such as are desirous to learne the same: and they are set downe according to the order which is observed at these dayes in this Realme of Englande as followeth.

These 'measures of blowing' as 'set downe in the notes' are quaintly described. Here are some specimens, each being followed by a music-type example:

The Call for the Companie in the morning. All to be blowen with one winde.

The Strake to the Fielde. To be blowen with two windes.
The vncoupling of the Couerte side. To be blowen with three windes.

The Seeke (2 windes).

The Earthing of a Foxe, if he be couerable (3 windes). The death of a Foxe, eyther in fielde or couert (3 windes).

- , ,, ,, Deare with Bowe, or Greyhoundes.
- ,, ,, Bucke with houndes (2 windes).

To the same year (15.75) belongs the following publication, issued in six separate part-books, and entitled:

Cantiones, quae ab argymento sacrae vocantur, quinque et sex partium, autoribus Thoma Tallisio & Guilielmo Birdo Anglis, Serenissimæ Regineæ Maiestati à priuato Sacello generosis, & Organistis. Cum privilegio.

Excudebat Thomas Vautrollerius typographus Londinensis in claustro vulgo Blackfriers commorans, 1575.

Apart from its contents—sixteen motets by Tallis and eighteen by Byrd—this collection of sacred music has a special interest in that it was the first book published under the Letters Patent which gave Tallis and Byrd the exclusive right of printing

The capture of 'an Harte Royall' must have made serious demands upon the lungs of the huntsman, as the 'measures' read:

The pryse of an Harte Royall. With three windes. This to be blowen thrice with three seuerall windes, and the Rechate vpon it.

The Rechate (or Recheat)—which had to be played 'with three windes'—is a horn-flourish to call the hounds off after they have lost the scent, or at the end of the chase. Shakespeare uses the term in 'Much Ado about Nothing':

But that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead . . . all women shall pardon me.

music and ruled music-paper for twenty-one years, the first of its kind. Moreover, from a typographical point of view, it furnishes a better specimen of music-printing than any other during that particular period: it is certainly very much better than the productions of the 17th century, and indeed it is almost as good as that from the printing-press of Wynkyn de Worde in 1530 (see the facsimile on p. 15), although the above book, issued forty five years later, was printed at one impression.

A 16th century English lutenist, who practised his profession at the Court of Denmark, may now claim our attention. He was the author of a curious book, dated 1603 and dedicated to King James I. Its title-page reads:

In God reioyce With Instrument and voyce.

THE SCHOOLE OF MVSICKE: wherein is taught the perfect method of true fingering of the Lute, Pandora, Orpharion, and Viol de Gamba, with most infallible generall rules, both easie and delightfull. . . . Newly composed by Thomas Robinson, Lutenist.

Exceedingly quaint and equally frank is Mr. Robinson's foreword to his 'The Schoole of Musicke.' He says:

To the Reader,

Right courteous Gentlemen, and gentle Readers, your fauourable acceptance of my first fruits from idlenesse, hath eccited mee further to congratulate your Musicall endeauors. And in my conceit, I can no way better fit your good and willing mindes, then in shewing you how you may very soone, and very perfectly instruct your selues to play (vpon your best beloued instrument) the Lute, also the Orpharion, Pandora, and Viol de Gamba any lesson (if it bee not too too (sic) trickified) at the first sight. Most beautifully engraved on copper plates by William Hole, a celebrated engraver in the reign of James I., the work consists of twenty-one pieces by that distinguished trio of English composers—William Byrd, John Bull and Orlando Gibbons. On the title-page is a three-quarter-length representation of a lady playing upon the virginals. In 1613 the work was reprinted with a dedication to the Elector Palatine and Princess Elizabeth.

An amateur English composer is represented by two publications of which the author was Tobias Hume, an army officer, an excellent performer on the viol-da-gamba, and afterwards a poor brother of

Robinson was also the author of 'New Citharen Lessons' (1609), in which he describes himself as 'Student in all the seuen liberal Sciences.' In the foreword to this book he naïvely says ('To the Reader'):

The last piece in the book, a Hunting-song 'to be sung to the Bass-Viol,' is a curious specimen of programme-music with some very amusing explanations: 'the Hounds do yorne,' 'Blow the vncoupling,' 'Play lowde for Ioler is in,' and 'Winde the death of the Buck with horns.' At the close is the author's testimonial to the excellence of his composition:

To turn to a more serious side of the English printed books, the collection includes the 'Sarum Missal' of 1498 and later issues, the 'York Manual' (1509), Christopher Tye's 'Acts of the Apostles' (1553), the 'Book of Common Order' (Edinburgh, 1565 and 1575). The earliest metrical Psalter printed in England is Utenhove's 'Hondert Psalmen' (1561), printed by John Day for the London. Printed for & Sould by Charles King in Dutch Church, Austin Friars, London. London House-yard near St. Pauls: Jn Young at ye Dutch Church, Austin Friars, London. The Dolphin & Crown ye West end of St. Pauls Churchyard: 1562 edition of Sternhold and Hopkins (to Jn Hare at ye Viol & Flute in Cornhill. 1711. Price adopt its familiar designation), though not 'a very good copy,' is extremely rare, being one of the three copies known in England.

John Day's Psalter of 1563 is entitled:

Tenor (Contra Tenor. Medius. Bassus) of the whole

Maiestatis.

Each part is contained in a separate volume. The title of this Psalter is very misleading, as it by no means contains 'the whole psalmes' (150), but only a selection, sixty in all, in addition to canticles, responses, prayers, &c., all in metre. Several of the Psalms have two tunes assigned to them; Psalms 51 and 52 have each three tunes; Psalms 103 and 137 each four tunes; while Psalm 44 is honoured with five tunes. The composers of these Psalter tunes are practically unknown men: their names (as given in the book) are Brimle, W. Parsons, T. Cawston, N. Sotherton, and J. Hake. The facsimile (on p. 17) of a page in the Bassus part of Mr. Alfred H. Littleton's copy shows the curious form of the bass clef, a combination of the C and F clef signs. In one instance this clef is placed on the middle line; the tenor clef is also used in this Bassus part, sometimes placed either on the top or the second lines of the stave. The initial letters this interesting collection of tunes are very fine, as the specimen in the facsimile testifies.

Here is a copy of Archbishop Parker's Psalter ('The whole Psalter translated into English Metre'), printed in or about 1567. This rare volume contains the first appearance of 'Tallis' Canon,' the tune now so inseparably associated with Bishop Ken's Evening Hymn, to which attention was drawn in considerable detail in The Musical Times of November, 1903, page 722. Unfortunately the collection does not include the early English Metrical Psalters of Coverdale (1539?) Crowley (1549), and Seager (1553).

Mention must be made of Sir George Smart's remarkable conducting score of Handel's 'Messiah,' a volume of portentous dimensions. The title-page, in the handwriting of Smart, reads: 'The 3 well bound printed and MS. scores I conducted from at the oratorios and many Festivals.' It is interesting to find that the nonagenarian knight has inserted a sharp sign to the F in the bass leading into the second part of the Pastoral Symphony.

Lastly, the completeness of the madrigal collection, English and Foreign, is a matter of sincere congratulation. There are, however, still some gaps. Concerning these, Mr. Barclay Squire says: 'In some cases we still want odd parts to complete our sets. We have none of the following, and should be glad if readers of The Musical Times would present them'!

THE ST. CECILIA WINDOW IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

The generosity of Mr. C. T. D. Crews, Master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, has found a fresh outlet in the St. Cecilia window which he has presented to St. Paul's Cathedral. This gift originated in the attendance of the Musicians' Company, in their corporate capacity, at the evening service in the cathedral on St. Cecilia's Day, 1906, the first of what is intended to be an annual act of devotion. Mr. Crews was so impressed and gratified by this service, and more especially that the ancient Company, of which for the second time he is the much-esteemed Master, should once more unite itself 'in piety and worship with the Cathedral Church of St. Paul,' that he decided to commemorate the happy revival by making an interesting addition to the enrichment of the mother-church of the City of London.

No more appropriate position for the window could be found than the north transept of the cathedral, for it almost sheds its rays upon the monuments to Sir John Stainer and Sir Arthur Sullivan, while in close proximity is the roll of organists of St. Paul's. All these memorials are in the eastern aisle of the north transept, which is rapidly becoming a musicians' corner, and now illumined by the new window.

corner' and now illumined by the new window.

Designed by Mr. John R. Clayton, of the firm of Messrs. Clayton & Bell, the window has for its subject Saint Cecilia. The figure of the saint, clothed in garments of richest colouring, is represented as playing on an organ upborne by golden angels, while other angels are shown in the background bearing scrolls inscribed with the words Cantate Domino. The figure stands before a canopied structure of Renaissance detail in harmony with the building. The window is richly bordered with groups of fruit and flowers, such as Sir Christopher Wren favoured throughout his masterpiece at the hands of Grinling Gibbons. The effect is silvery, with elements of richness in colour. From the drawing (in colours) of the window, forming one of the special supplements to our present issue, it will be observed that the aim of the design has been to secure an effect of broad simplicity, and to avoid a suppression of lighting (which the cathedral cannot afford) and also of complex detail inconsistent with the colossal character of the building. On the field of white between the central figure and the bordering are four cherub-heads and two quotations from 'Alexander's Feast,' Handel's setting of Dryden's 'Ode to St. Cecilia.' At the base line of the window are the armorial bearings respectively of the Worshipful Company of Musicians (at the left-hand corner) and of the donor of the window. The inscription reads:

To the honour and glory of God
Presented by Charles Thomas Daniel Crews, D.L., J.P., F.S.A., twice master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians on behalf of the Company to commemorate the revival of a religious service by the members of the Company on St. Cecilia's Day in 1906.

The dedication ceremony took place on Monday afternoon, November 25 (postponed from St. Cecilia's Day, November 22). The short Office was commenced by the venerable Dean (Dr. Robert Gregory), now in his eighty-ninth year, who recited the Lord's Prayer. Mr. Crews then committed the window to the care and charge of the Dean and Chapter in the following well-chosen words:

In the name of the Holy and Undivided Trinity, to the honour and glory of God, and in the faith of the Communion of Saints, remembering more especially the singular grace and virtue bestowed upon the Virgin and Martyr, St. Cecilia, we offer this window in humble thanksgiving for the many mercies which have been vouchsafed to the Worshipful Company of Musicians in this City. And more especially we would praise God, that of His goodness He has put it into our hearts to unite ourselves once more in piety and worship with the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, the mother of this Diocese, and our own spiritual home. And we most humbly beseech Him to grant that we, who are bound together here in these sacred ties, may have our fellowship with the saints in glory hereafter, through His merits alone in whose name we would dedicate this offering, Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen. I hereby ask the Dean and Chapter of this Cathedral to accept the custody of this gift, which I thus humbly desire to make to Almighty God and His holy Church-praying now and always that God Almighty will bless this house dedicated to His honour, and will vouchsafe to hear the prayers and accept the praises of all those who minister and all who worship here.

The Archdeacon of London (Dr. W. M. Sinclair), in reply, said:

On behalf of the Dean and Chapter of this cathedral, I accept this window from the Master of the Musicians' Company, to the glory of God, and in acknowledgment of the restored association between that Company and this Church.

Though we know little of St. Cecilia, there is no doubt that her name has for centuries been honoured in connection with the cultivation of Music. It is also clear that she was a Roman lady, one of the four principal Virgins and Martyrs of the Western Church, and commemorated both in East and West alike on November 22.

In our own day authentic traces have been discovered of St. Cecilia. The Italian archæologist De Rossi investigated the crypt which bears her name, and opened the inner chamber to which the passage had been blocked for centuries. It contained a large empty niche, with an inscription 'In honour of Cæcilia the Martyr.' Hard by were found other memorials of Christian Cæcelii from the end of the 2nd century onwards. 'There can be little doubt, therefore,' says our former colleague, Bishop Lightfoot, 'that we have discovered the place from which Pope Paschal removed what was supposed to be the body in the 9th century.'

The connection of St. Cecilia's name with music is easily understood. It was in 821 that Pope Paschal believed he discovered her body. For its future protection he built on to her church a monastery, to which he gave a handsome endowment, to provide that the religious should guard the bodies of the Saint and her companions, and chant the praises of God round her tomb day and night. Such a continuous service of song could not but kindle a legendloving imagination, and the story grew that often, while the Saviour's praises arose in vocal music, Cecilia's own instrumental accompaniment was heard. In England, at the latter part of the 17th century, her day, November 22, was found convenient for holding an annual festival that was set on foot for the encouragement of music. This celebration brought the lyric poet also into requisition, and odes for St. Cecilia's day were annually offered to the public. All the rest of these contributions however were thrown into the shade by the genius of Dryden and Pope.

We rejoice that you, the Worshipful Company of Musicians, have revived the musical memories of St. Cecilia by an annual service at St. Paul's. And we congratulate you that the pious liberality of your Worthy Master enables you to dedicate this beautiful memorial alike of the same Roman lady and of your association here. We trust that God will continue to bless the efforts of this Cathedral for the celebration of His praises as perfectly as they can be done by human voice and hand. And may your own cultivation of the delights of music, and your encouragement of its study by others, receive the grace and favour of the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Evensong, which immediately followed the dedication service, began with the processional hymn 'Angel-voices, ever singing' to Dr. E. G. Monk's stirring tune, and concluded with the hymn 'Praise the Lord! ye heavens, adore Him,' sung to Haydn's familiar strain of the Austrian National Anthem. The service (Magnificat and Nunc dimittis) was the fine festival setting in the key of A by Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral and a member of the Musicians' Company, while no better choice of an anthem could have been made than S. S. Wesley's masterly composition, 'Ascribe unto the Lord.' The music, beautifully rendered by the full cathedral choir, was conducted by Sir George Martin and accompanied on the organ by Mr. Charles Macpherson, sub-organist of the cathedral.

The subsequent celebration of St. Cecilia's Day is referred to on the next page.

The death of Lord Kelvin-we share in the widespread regret which the event has called forthrecalls the fact that he was fond of and greatly interested in music. In the year 1845-46, just after he had taken his degree, he, as William Thomson, was president of the Cambridge University Musical Society, then in the infancy of its existence. In the article on the Society in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (1st edn., iv. 204) it is stated that 'The conductors were usually the Presidents of the Society.' It would be interesting to know if Lord Kelvin ever officiated in that capacity. The following authentic musical anecdote of the great scientist will serve to illustrate his humour. When scientist will serve to illustrate his humour. his famous 'sounding machine' for taking deep-sea soundings was in process of evolution, a fellow scientist asked him the purpose of a coil of pianoforte-wire. He was told it was for sounding. This answer further aroused the curiosity of the questioner, who said, 'What note?' Lord Kelvin promptly replied, The deep C.

The splendid library of musical literature formed by Mr. James E. Matthew has been lost to England, having been purchased by a dealer in old books in Berlin for the sum of £2,500. It is sad to think that this unique collection—the largest private musical library in the world—should not have been purchased by a wealthy lover of music or a few well-to-do amateurs, to whom such an amount as the above would have been in comparison small. The library will now be split up and sold piecemeal, instead of having been kept intact in this country where, during the last forty years, Mr. Matthew has so diligently and whole-heartedly formed it.

Sir Frederick Bridge has been appointed External Examiner for Degrees in Music at the University of Manchester.

Musicians held its usual St. Cecilia's Day Celebration at Stationers' Hall on November 25, postponed from November 22. A large company sat down to dinner, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, President of the Club, being in the chair. In replying to the toast of 'The Livery Club' (proposed by the Hon. W. H. Goschen), the President, after having referred to the great success of the Livery Club as an important adjunct to the Musicians' Company, went on to speak of the 'solemn music' they had heard in St. Paul's Cathedral that afternoon (see page 18 of the present issue), and said:

Such services were in past times frequently, if not annually, held in St. Paul's Cathedral, or in other city churches on St. Cecilia's Day-services with which there is little reason to doubt the Musicians' Company was intimately To-day's service and that celebrated on St. connected. Cecilia's Day last year were both sanctioned by the Dean and Chapter in response to a suggestion which came directly from our Livery Club. It is our desire that these annual services—these 'solemn musics'—shall be revived and become, as they were in former times, permanent institutions.

In addition to such church celebrations, music in praise of St. Cecilia was sung—at least annually—in secular buildings. In this Hall itself meetings and performances of Odes to St. Cecilia were given each year from 1683—the earliest recorded date-down to 1703.

We cannot think of these St. Cecilian celebrations without being reminded of the glorious name of Henry Purcell—the same Purcell who, in 1692, played, and was heard to sing—with 'incredible graces'—in this identical Hall in which you now are seated. Purcell composed the music to no fewer than four Odes on these occasions. Other Odes were composed by John Blow, Maurice Greene, William Boyce, Daniel Purcell, Samuel Wesley, and the immortal Handel, whose two great settings-which contain some of his sublimest thoughts-are so well known.

It is the heartfelt desire of our Livery Club that these St. Cecilian celebrations should be continued and become permanently established. In order to make this possible we are anxious to induce musicians of the present day to follow in the footsteps of their great predecessors-to persuade them to produce compositions worthy of the great subject and worthy of being rendered in St. Paul's Cathedral. There is every reason to hope that this desired object will One of our members, the Rev. soon be accomplished. Henry Cart de Lafontaine—who has already done much to aid the progress of music—has expressed his willingness to come forward and help to bring our great desire to a practical issue. Consequently, with the aid of the authorities of St. Paul's Cathedral, the lovers of music may in the near future look forward to many glorious celebrations of St. Cecilia's Day.

Not the least interesting feature of the evening's entertainment was the excellent selection of music, which, as in olden times, is always an enjoyable feature of these St. Cecilia celebrations. The concerted vocal pieces were Byrd's madrigal for five voices, 'Come, let us sing with merry glee,' and Spohr's 'Hymn to St. Cecilia,' the singers being Miss Christine Bywater (soloist), Masters Wallis Brown and Leslie Battensby, and Messrs. George May, Frank J. Webster, George Stubbs and Greeves Johnson, the four gentlemen being members of St. Paul's Cathedral Choir. The vocal solos consisted of two excerpts from an almost forgotten and unpublished 'Ode to St. Cecilia's Day,' composed by Samuel Wesley in 1794, and proved to be most interesting; the first, beginning 'When heav'n-born Peace,' was sung by Miss Christine Bywater, while the second, a capital baritone song ('To arms! to arms! that noble, dreadful sound'), was splendidly sung by Mr. Greeves Johnson, and excited the warmest enthusiasm, fully justified by reason of its melodious and vigorous my seat on nothing!! Tableau!' For strains. All the foregoing vocal pieces (except the life Mr. Herbert Thompson was floored.

The Livery Club of the Worshipful Company of madrigal) were ably accompanied by 'The Band of fusicians held its usual St. Cecilia's Day Celebration Musick.' This picked body of first-rate players on well-tuned stringed instruments consisted of Messrs. H. Bonarius, Rowsby Woof, C. J. Woodhouse and H. Parsons (violins); Waldo Warner and E. Yonge (violas); R. Grimson, P. Peruzzi (violoncellos); and Claude Hobday (double-bass), while Mr. Stanley Hawley (a Liveryman of the Company) rendered efficient aid at the pianoforte, and Mr. Lennox Clayton proved an enthusiastic and able conductor. These excellent performers excelled themselves in playing, in two instalments, the Overture from a St. Cecilian Ode composed by Dr. William Boyce. The Allegro of the overture is an exhilarating movement on the following fugal subject:

The gavotte and minuet, in stately contrast to the bustling semiquavers of the fugue, proved to be most delightful in its old-world stateliness. Needless to say that the extraordinary freshness of the music, its remarkable vigour and melodic charm, gave immense pleasure. It seems strange that such music should lie buried in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, the parts having been copied, expressly for this occasion, from a manuscript in that collection.

The versatility of Mr. Herbert Thompson, the musical critic of the Yorkshire Post, is well-known to his friends. Facile with his pen and skilful with his brush, he formerly essayed the Corney Grain field, in which he reaped a rich harvest of applause. He was also in demand as a reciter. The 'History of the Bradford Festival Choral Society' (reviewed on p. 28 of the present issue) informs us that on March 21, 1884, he appeared as reader in a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Athalie.' THE MUSICAL TIMES in recording the event under 'Music in Yorkshire, from our own correspondent'-said: 'Mr. Herbert Thompson, barrister, recited the interpolatory readings.' This reference to the barrister-reciter, though naturally brief, can be supplemented by interpolatory the following autobiographical note with which Mr. Thompson has kindly favoured us. 'In those days Mr. R. S. Burton (organist of Leeds Parish Church) got me to give these recitations for several of his numerous Choral Societies, and I remember doing them at Bradford, Halifax and Harrogate, as well as twice at the little town of Malton, where I then had my home. On one occasion I recollect getting up to adjust my desk, when an obliging soprano behind kindly moved my chair out of my way, so I resumed my seat on nothing!! Tableau!' For once in his

Sir Edward Elgar's 'Variations on an Original Theme' for orchestra were recently performed at the Cercle des étrangers, Monte Carlo, by the Lamoureux Orchestra, under the able direction of M. Léon Jehin, The programme and enthusiastically received. contained the following annotation:

Edward Elgar est nè á Broadheath, prés de Worcester, en 1857, il est d'origine Saxonne. Les Variations Symphoniques que nous exécutons pour la première fois à Monte Carlo ont été données au Concert Richter de Londres le 16 mars 1904, où elles ont obtenu un très grand succés de public et de presse.

Il v a en tout quatorze variations qui ont chacune un caractère spécial, chaque variation est dédiée à un ami de l'auteur. Le Finale (14e variation) revêt un caractère solennel; c'est comme une apothéose sonore, cù se reproduisent les différents thémes du morçeau qui se termine d'une façon magistrale.

The newspapers, in recording the above concert, said:

Edward Elgar, the most celebrated of English composers. . . These Variations were well received by the public and the press, and thoroughly appreciated by the dilettanti de Monte Carlo.—Le Petit Niçois.

Greatly varied and rich in ideas, these Variations are no less ingenious in their development, and they are of quite extraordinarily masterly orchestration. - L'éclaireur.

They denote a pre-eminent composer of vast knowledge, who, although he can be placed in the foremost rank as contrapuntist and polyphonist, still remains a melodist; therefore this work was warmly received. The theme is exceedingly well wrought; every one of the Variations has its own particular well-chosen colour (timbre). They are delightful ensembles. . . It is a fine composition, one that exhibits in a very high degree the composer's talent and his ability in handling the orchestra.—Le Petit Monegasque.

The reform of the musical section of Welsh Eisteddfodau has been much discussed during recent years. We have in these columns again and again referred to the matter, and expressed the hope that the musical genius of the Welsh race would soon have freer scope for development than it at present enjoys. We are now glad to record the formation of an Association of Choral Societies and Eisteddfod representatives. Distinguished patronage has been secured, and what appears to be a strong executive council of nearly forty conductors and others closely concerned has been elected. North and South Wales are represented, but some well-known names are conspicuous by their absence. The president is Mr. D. Bowen, of Abercarn, and the secretary is Mr. R. H. Jackson, of Abergavenny. The first object of the Association is thus stated:

To provide a central organization for choir conductors and Eisteddfod secretaries, and generally to do all such things as from time to time may be necessary to elevate the status of choirs and Eisteddfodau, and promote the advancement and progress of music.

Many other objects are also stated in the constitution. At the first blush it would seem that the new Association is attempting to regulate too much, but all this will probably be tempered by experience. English Association of Musical Competition Festivals has maintained its unity partly because it has refrained from laying down rules and regulations. has been content to hold aloft a banner and to let who will follow as loyal volunteers in a good cause. Whether more government and drill are advisable in Wales remains to be seen. But in any case we wish the new Association a prosperous and useful career.

performances of Wagner's 'Ring des Nibelungen' in the English language, announced to be given, under Dr. Richter's direction, at the Royal Opera during the present month, will be looked forward to with interest. DEAR SIR,—Your letter and the news contained therein have given me much pleasure, and I cannot omit to thank you for it.

The prospectus of the ninety-sixth season of the Philharmonic Society has now been issued. Four actual novelties are to be presented: a Viola concerto by York Bowen, a Violin concerto by Hubay, a Vocal scena ('The Bells') by Franco Leoni, and a Symphony in C by Sibelius, the last named to be conducted by the composer. Other symphonies are Beethoven in C minor, Dvorak 'From the New World,' Schubert in C, Schumann in D minor and C, and Tchaikovsky in E minor. Of Overtures there are to be played Egmont and Leonora No. 2, (Beethoven), Academic (Brahms), Comedy (Harty), and Flying Dutchman (Wagner). Orchestral music will be further exemplified in the Brandenburger concerto for strings, No. 3 (Bach), Prelude from 'Sappho' (Bantock), Symphonic variations (Dvorák), Variations on an original theme (Elgar), Spring and Winter, from the symphonic suite 'The Seasons' (German), Funeral march (Grieg), Rhapsody No. 1 (Liszt), Symphonic poems 'Finlandia' (Sibelius) and 'Till Eulenspiegel' (Strauss), 'Death and Apotheosis' (Strauss), Introduction and closing scene from 'Tristan,' and Waldweben from 'Siegfried' (Wagner). In addition to those above mentioned, the concerto portion of the scheme consists of Brahms in B flat D'Albert in E flat, and Schumann in A minor, for pianoforte; and Bach's for two violins; Mozart will be represented by his Serenade nocturne No. 6, in D, for string quartet and orchestra. Mendelssohn once the idol of the Philharmonic Society, finds no place in the prospectus.

M. Claude Debussy is announced to conduct his three orchestral nocturnes at the Queen's Hall Symphony concert on February 1. This, his first public appearance in England, will undoubtedly stimulate interest in the work of one of the most original and fascinating composers of the day. No performances have as yet been given in London of works of M. Debussy's so well known by repute as 'La Demoiselle Elue' and 'Pelléas et Mélisande'; but 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune ' has become a favourite piece at Queen's Hall since its first English performance there on August 20, 1904. It was a London critic who, commenting on this performance, was under the impression that 'faune' meant fawn, and facetiously inquired what the afternoon thoughts of a young gazelle were likely to be!

A 'Library of Music' has recently been formed at the Edinburgh Public Library, under the supervision of Mr. William Cowan, Vice-Convenor of the Books Sub-Committee. No fewer than 557 volumes of vocal and instrumental music have been put into circulation at the Central Library for home use upon the same conditions as the other books in the lending department. An excellent catalogue, costing threepence, has been prepared, which not only includes music per se, but musical literature, both in the lending and reference departments of the institution. Moreover, these catalogue divisions are followed by the 'Marr Collection' formed by the late Robert A. Marr, an enthusiastic amateur of music in Edinburgh, and presented to the Public Library by his sister, Mrs. Joseph E. Cargill. The Marr Collection, though not large, contains some interesting books, including a few manuscripts. Among them is an Antiphonariam of the 15th or early 16th century, containing many examples of fine capital letters both in colour and in black, with some singularly beautiful scroll work. Act I of William Russell's oratorio 'The redemption of Israel'—full score, dated October 3, 1804—is also included, and of special local interest are the following:

Minute Book of the Edinburgh Musical Association, with lists of members and record of their attendances, 1844-52. Index to the whole musick belonging to the Edinburgh

Musical Society, 1782.

Volume containing the Rules of the Professional Society of Musicians (Edinburgh) with the signatures of the members, dated June, 1824, and also Rules, dated December 31, 1836.

From the point of view of local musical history, the importance of preserving such documents as those above enumerated cannot be over-estimated.

An interesting publication, dated December 6, 1907, has reached us, entitled 'List of compositions performed for the first time in London at the concerts founded by Mr. Robert Newman in 1893, at Queen's Hall, and taken over by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, Limited, in the autumn of 1902.' In spite of this long title it could easily and truthfully be made longer by the addition of the words 'and last,' inserted after the word 'first,' as regards many of the works produced and forgotten during these fourteen years. Anvhow. the list, a most instructive document in itself, should furnish much food for thought to the valiant and large army of composers who cover much paper with music that fails to prove acceptable. Some gems, of course, have been discovered among these 447 novelties. Nearly one-third (to be exact, the number is officially stated as 142) are the compositions of British composers, whose gifts vary considerably in regard to creative genius. Apart from the mixed feelings which a perusal of this list will produce in some directions, it will be most useful for reference. As it is set forth in chronological form, no one can accuse it of not being up to date. Perhaps the Directors of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, Limited, may see their way to issue so interesting and important a catalogue in the alphabetical order of composers.

It is reported from Vienna that some letters of Beethoven (twenty-eight in number), together with forty-seven pages of manuscript music in the handwriting of the composer, have just been discovered in the Austrian capital. The letters, which are said to have been written between the years 1816 and 1823, are likely to prove specially interesting if this discovery can be authenticated.

A Sheffield choir, of about 350 voices and under the direction of Dr. Henry Coward, has accepted the invitation of Dr. Charles Harriss to pay a visit to Canada next autumn. These vociferous Sheffielders will show Canadians how choral works ought to be sung. Their répertoire will include 'The Messiah,' 'Elijah,' and two of Bach's motets.

The State Parliament of Victoria passed two years ago a Registration of Teachers Act. On the possibilities of organized action being pointed out to the music profession, the members thereof practically unanimously registered themselves under 'Teachers of special subjects.' The process of testing new applicants is now under consideration, and for this purpose the Registration Board has called in the services of an Advisory Committee, which is now considering the draft scheme of examination drawn up by Prof. Peterson.

Mr. Albert Visetti relates an amusing operatic incident which came under his notice some years ago. Through his good offices, one of his pupils had been allotted the part of an old and sorrowful man in an opera of Donizetti's, and the stage manager had decided that for the full expression of the grief with which the interpreter of the part was supposed to be oppressed, a halting limp was essential. The remainder of the droll story is best told in Mr. Visetti's own words: 'Fearful as to my pupil's reception, I did not put in an appearance at the opera house until the end of the second act, and as I wanted to hide myself, I went into the gallery. There he was on the stage, taking his call and jumping with joy. An old woman near me was clapping wildly. I said, "You like him." She answered, "Well, you see, he was so lame before, we are so pleased to see he has recovered"! Alas! my dear pupil's success was in his legs.'

Mr. George Bernard Shaw, having been asked by Colonel Mapleson to write the libretto of an opera to be set to music by Dr. Saint-Saëns, has replied to the invitation in the following facetious strain:

Unfortunately I have a prior engagement with Richard Strauss, which is at present rather hung up by the fact that I want to write the music and he wants to write the libretto, and we both get along very slowly for want of practice.

I wonder whether Elgar would turn his hand to opera. I

I wonder whether Elgar would turn his hand to opera. I have always played a little with the idea of writing a libretto; but though I have had several offers, nothing has come of it. When one is past fifty, and is several years in arrear with one's own natural work, the chances of beginning a new job are rather slender.

A correspondent writes: 'The death of Dr. E. J. Crow reminds me of an awkward incident during his organistship of Ripon Cathedral. Some six or seven years ago I was spending the week-end at Ripon, when I made the acquaintance of Dr. Crow, who very kindly invited me to go round the Cathedral with him at the close of the Sunday afternoon service. With an intelligent young verger as cicerone we had just started on our peregrinations when some Americans, staying at the same hotel as myself, asked to join us. During a pause in the verger's descriptions, and while we were standing in the Choir, the senior American lady pointed to the lectern and said, "I can't think why these cathedrals don't have a decent bird, not a miserable crow like that!" This nasal-toned matron from across the Atlantic had no idea of the name of the organist (Dr. Crow) who was standing by, but whose perch was not on the lectern, but on the organseat of the cathedral.'

That a well-considered, scientific treatise on English folk-song has now become necessary, every thoughtful musician will acknowledge. Moreover, it may readily be admitted that a man whose zealous devotion to folk-song has resulted in the collection 'in round numbers of fifteen hundred tunes,' taken down from some three hundred and fifty country singers and players, is likely to have reliable knowledge of the subject upon which he writes. Mr. Sharp's 'conclusions' have certainly not been hastily arrived at, for they bear upon the face of them an assured at, for they bear upon the face of them an assured aconviction as to their soundness. Whether all will agree with his deductions is another question, but there is no doubting the fact that they have been well and honestly thought out.

An accepted definition of 'folk-song,' as now understood, has been for some time a desideratum. The dictionaries are of little use; a literal translation of the German word 'Volkslied' is also misleading. Mr. Sharp supplies the definition, 'The song created by the common people.' This is all very well, and most of us will agree with its spirit, but unfortunately it brings in its train a still more knotty problem to solve, viz., Who are the common people? Our author answers, 'those whose mental development has been due, not to any formal system of training or education, but solely to environment, communal association, and direct contact with the ups and downs of life.' This is much too long for an appendix, and furthermore we are all mentally developed by environment and communal association, and we all have ups and downs in a greater or lesser degree. No! a compact definition of 'folk-song' is still needed.

Mr. Sharp contends that the folk-song after its creation tends to evolve still further. He discountenances the theory that the folk-song is really, figuratively speaking, as he happily puts it in the words of the botanist, 'a garden escape' from the art-world; in other worlds that it is not act song which has obtained other words, that it is an art-song which has obtained traditionary life among the 'common people.' will have many supporters in this contention; but he will be the first to grant that there are many 'gardenescapes' found among folk-song which the singer will offer in perfect good faith among the wild flowers which constitute his garland. Young collectors who have chanced upon such unfortunate finds may be too ready to assume that, in the main, folk-songs are merely corruptions of 'composed' songs, and will raise their voices to swell the cry 'England has no national music born of the people like other countries.' little consideration will show those who are of this way of thinking that a race which has no true folk-song would be as marvellous as a race without speech, and that the real wonder is, not that the English peasant has a folk-song, but at the crass ignorance and stupidity which, until the last few years, has denied its existence and ignored the attempts made to bring it into the light.

In dealing with the origin of the folk-song, Mr. Sharp points to many tempting paths along which we might follow him. He prints some interesting variants made, more or less extemporarily and perhaps unconsciously, by certain folk-singers. He thereby suggests how easily such vocalists, gifted with a ready flow of melody, are true creators of folk melody, and are responsible for its variation. Other influences in this direction are forgotten words, bridged over by unmetrical lines for which the singer has, perforce, to use an irregular phrase of melody. That Mr. Sharp is a strong believer in what he calls the 'communal origin' of folk-song, is instanced by the well-known example of A inventing a tale, and telling it to B, who passes it on and on until it reaches the ears of Z. The passes it on and on until it reaches the ears of Z. result of this transmission is, that the tale as told by A is totally unlike that heard by Z. Mr. Sharp asks, Who is really the author of the tale told in its final form? Certainly not A, and certainly not Y, the last teller of it. He maintains that only the form which 'accurately expresses the taste and feeling of the community 'will survive, and that what is purely personal will be gradually but surely eliminated.' While there is of course much truth in this, there remain many puzzling things about folk-song—or rather folk-melody—which are not solved by such obvious reasoning, despite the A to Z process, it being well known that there are many folk-airs noted down hundreds of miles apart which have but little variation.

Mr. Sharp deduces that art-music 'is the work of the individual, and expresses his own ideals and aspirations only; it is composed in, comparatively speaking, a short period of time, and by being committed to paper, it is for ever fixed in one unalterable form. Folk-music, on the other hand, is the product of a race, and reflects feelings and tastes that are communal rather than personal: it is always in solution; its creation is never completed; while at every moment of its history it exists not in one form but in many.'

There is also a considerable amount of truth in this; but it must be admitted that a great number of art-songs which have been individually and personally created, having won the affections of the people have really become 'communal.'

As folk-melodies are so much constructed from the modes, our author devotes a whole chapter to this subject, where we need not follow him. In this connection, however, he has several striking passages which deserve quotation, e.g.: 'Needless to say, modal folk-airs have suffered grievously at the hands Curiously enough, Brahms, of modern musicians. who had the deepest affection for folk-music, is one of This is particularly unfortunate, the worst offenders. for Brahms is regarded by musicians of the present generation, and justly so, with the deepest reverence: and this makes it extremely difficult to win a hearing for views that conflict with his teaching Many writers have consistently followed the example set by Brahms, and have harmonized their modal folk-airs in modern and non-modal fashion. however, of his imitators are equipped with a like technique; consequently, in their hands, the faults of the method become magnified.'

In the chapter on English folk-scales there are many very pertinent remarks. 'My own experience,' the author says, 'has taught me that with folk-singers of to-day the sense of harmony is very rudimentary. It was only very few of them, for instance, who were able to recognize their own songs when I played harmonized versions of them on the piano; and still fewer who could sing them to the simplest instrumental accompaniment. The average folk-singer of to-day stands, I believe, with regard to harmony, just where his more cultivated predecessor stood in pre-harmonic days.' It is pointed out that a large number of modal folk-airs begin 'with a note that is not the tonic, and with a phrase which is not suggestive of the tonic harmony.' This condition he attributes to a well-observed manner of singing folk-songs. The singer, having no accompaniment, and with his mind engrossed with the words rather than with the tune, makes no pause between the verses; on the other hand the accompanied art-song has its key strongly defined at the beginning of each verse. Moreover, the musician thinks more of the music than the words he sings, 'accordingly, the opening phrase [of some folk-songs] especially of ballet-tunes, has come to be evolved in a form which will fit naturally and continuously upon the concluding strain of the air.' The old English circular tunes—' Dargason' is quoted as an example—have the peculiar quality of avoiding what the folk-song singer finds so tiresome, the pause at the end of a verse.

'Rhythmical Forms and Melodic Figures' is an interesting chapter. In the attempts here made to reduce to some order the characteristics of folk-melody in respect of its form, Mr. Sharp has arrived at these conclusions:

(I) A folk-song is always anonymous. (This does not mean that all anonymous music is folk-music.)

(2) Modal melodies, set to secular words, are nearly always of folk origin.

(3) Song-tunes in the minor mode are either composed tunes, or folk-airs that have suffered corruption.

(4) Folk-tunes do not modulate.

(5) Folk-melodies are non-harmonic.

(6) Folk-melodies often contain bars of irregular length.
 (7) There is a prevalence of five and seven time-measures in folk-airs.

The two chapters on 'Folk-Poetry' and 'Folk-Singers and their Songs,' are worthy of careful perusal. In the latter the author deals with the 'old English song' which has been so loosely confounded with the folk-song. He makes the true statement that the 'Vicar of Bray'—although now sung to, presumably, a folk-air, 'The Country Garden'-was, as a song, never sung by the English peasant. 'Gardens' is a Morris dance-tune still traditionally in the South of England. ' Country In this connection it may interest Mr. Sharp and others to turn to a letter (by the present writer) in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1892, where the whole question of the 'Vicar of Bray' in relation to the tune 'Country Garden' is dealt with. It may be mentioned, too, that the tune 'Country Garden' is in print in several books of ballad operas onwards from 1728 to dance collections of 1744, &c. Mr. Sharp violently accuses Gay or Pepusch of altering the folk-airs in the 'Beggars' Opera,' in order to fit their new words. He particularly instances 'Cease your funning,' whereof he says 'the rhythm of this fine old melody, "Constant Billy," is changed that it might fit the metre of the new words.' He begs a comparison 'between the edited and the traditional versions of this air, which will serve to illustrate the nature of the alterations or "improvements," of which Gay or Pepusch, or both of them, were guilty.' The 'Constant Billy' Morris-tune were guilty.' The 'Constant Billy' Morris-tune which Mr. Sharp instances, and which he has recently collected, is a dance tune pure and simple, and it is but a form of some original, of which 'As down in the meadows,' and 'The Black Joke' are also variants. 'Cease your funning' is found in early engraved works as 'Lofty mountains' " ('When the hills and lofty mountains,' or 'Charming Billy' on song sheets), and it is merely another form of it.

'The Dancing Master' (vol. iii., cir. 1726, p. 170) contains the identical tune 'Constant Billey,' and this, as will be seen, is sufficiently near 'Cease your funning' to prove that when the tune was taken into the opera it was current with the same rhythm which

Mr. Sharp objects to.

'CONSTANT BILLEY." "DANCING MASTER," Vol. iii.,

' Daniel Wright's 'Compleat Tutor for ye Flute.' Cir. 1735. Se also Chappell, p. 665.

Mr. Sharp is, I think, unduly severe on the compilers of early ballad operas. He says: 'It is impossible to accept the tunes in "The Beggars' Opera" as trustworthy records of peasant-song; and a like criticism must regretfully be passed upon all the so-called folk-airs contained in the forty or more ballad operas which followed it.' The 'Beggars' Opera' is not great in folk-airs, and I think I am quite correct in saying that every tune used in it can be found in print previous to its production. In some other early ballad operas, traditional airs have a place, as for instance, 'The Country Garden' in the 'Quakers' Opera' (1728) and the 'Grub Street Opera' (1731). These tunes (given under the name) may, I think, be favourably compared with the versions known among folk-singers of to-day. It is interesting also to note the differences between the varied forms of the tune 'The Miller of the Dee' as recovered by folk-song collectors, and as sung to different sets of verses, with the original air 'The Budgeon it is a fine Trade,' to be found in some of the early ballad operas, but it is indeed difficult to say with certainty which is the less corrupt form.

Mr. Sharp's book is a work that no folk-song student can afford to be without. As I have before said, his 'conclusions' may not be everybody's, but he has written a vigorous book full of thoughtfu reasoning which cannot lightly be set aside.

Church and Organ Music.

'ABIDE WITH ME.'

The editor of The Treasury has been seeking the opinion of his readers, in the form of a competition, as to the best twenty hymns. This he was prompted to do by a letter, signed 'Organist,' which appeared in the Daily Telegraph of September 11, and which contained the following sentence: 'The number of hymns, with their tunes, which seem to me satisfactory do not exceed twenty, and I very much doubt if many organists would be disposed to include more?'

The result of the competition is announced in the December issue of The Treasury. As 1,200 lists were sent in, a total of 24,000 'first lines' had to be examined and tabulated. The result is given as

Abide with me
 Lead, kindly Light
 O God, our help

4. Holy, Holy, Holy
5. The Church's One Foundation

6. Rock of Ages
7. And now, O Father
8. Hark, the Herald
9. Jesu, Lover of my soul

10. Come, Holy Ghost
11. Sun of my soul

12. When I survey13. All people that on earth14. For all the Saints

15. Jesus Christ is Risen16. Onward, Christian soldiers

17. O come, all ye faithful 18. Eternal Father

19. On the Resurrection Morning 20. Glory to Thee, my God, this night.

It was natural that much difference of opinion would exist among so many competitors as to what are the best twenty hymns; but 'Abide with me' not only headed the poll, but 'that one hymn only was included in the best twenty by more than one half of the competitors.' The editor goes on to say: 'So far, then, as our 1,200 correspondents are fairly representative of English churchmen, there is no doubt as to what is the most popular hymn used in the English church.'

The hymn, by the Rev. Henry Francis Lyte (1793-1847), perpetual curate of Lower Brixham, Devonshire, was written shortly before his death, under the following circumstances, as recorded by his daughter in a memoir of her father (1850):

The summer was passing away, and the month of September (that month in which he was once more to quit his native land) arrived, and each day seemed to have a special value as being one day nearer his departure. His family were surprised and almost alarmed at his announcing his intention of preaching once more to his people. His weakness, and the possible danger attending the effort, were urged to prevent it, but in vain. 'It was better,' as he used often playfully to say, when in comparative health, 'to wear out than to rust out.' He felt that he should be enabled to fulfil his wish, and feared not for the result. His expectation was well founded. He did preach, and amid the breathless attention of his hearers gave them the sermon on the Holy Communion, which is inserted last in this volume [i.e., the Remains] He afterwards assisted at the administration of the Holy Eucharist, and though necessarily much exhausted by the exertion and excitement of this effort, yet his friends had no reason to believe it had been hurtful to him. In the evening of the same day he placed in the hands of a near and dear relative the little hymn 'Abide with me,' with an air of his own composing, adapted to the words.

'Abide with me,' in its original form of eight stanzas, was written at Berry Head, Brixham, in September, 1847.

In regard to the popularity of the hymn, Dr. Julian ('Dictionary of Hymnology') may be quoted. He says: 'The use of this hymn is very extensive in all English-speaking countries. It is found in almost every collection published in Great Britain during the past thirty years,' a period to which ten or more years may now be added.

There is no need to give the familiar setting by Dr. W. H. Monk (1823-1889). The tune, called 'Eventide,' appeared in the first edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (1861), of which Monk was musical editor, and for which he specially composed it. 'Eventide' is Monk's best-known tune, and is to be found in every collection of modern times. It was composed under peculiar circumstances. He told a friend that as he (Monk) and Sir Henry Baker were leaving one of their meetings concerning the preparation of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' they suddenly remembered that there was no tune for 'Abide with me.' Monk at once sat down and, undisturbed by the sound of a pianoforte lesson then in progress, he wrote the tune in ten minutes. The false accent of the tune in the first verse has drawn forth some adverse criticism which is not without justification: in the latest edition (1904) of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' the following alternative for the first verse is thus given:

Will congregations readily adopt this reading? Most probably not.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung at Pershore Abbey on December 12, by the Pershore Abbey Choral Society and the choir of the church. Mr. A. Quarterman, of Worcester, led the orchestra, Mr. A. M. Slatter, organist of All Saints' Church, Evesham, presided at the organ, and Mr. C. Mason, organist of the Abbey, conducted.

'CHURCH PRAISE.'

In the year 1883 the Presbyterian Church of England issued its first official hymnal entitled 'Church Praise.' This collection— a great advance upon the semi-official 'Psalms and Hymns' which it superseded—has now undergone a thorough revision, and, in an amplified form, has recently been published, under its old title, by Messrs. James Nisbet & Co., Limited. The book, which extends to 945 pages, is something more than a hymnal per se. It may be styled a 'manual of praise,'as it contains some Metrical Psalms (in the 17th century rhymings of Francis Rous), a small selection of Prose Psalms pointed for chanting, ancient hymns and canticles, anthems, &c. The hymnal section proper ends at No. 624, but the remaining contents have been numbered on consecutively to No. 784.

Following the usual custom of preparing denominational hymnals, the new 'Church Praise' has been compiled by a committee of ministers and laymen. The work has been remarkably well done, far better, indeed, than the old book, prepared twenty-five years ago. The music drafting committee had the practical advice of Dr. F. N. Abernethy and Dr. J. E. Borland, who have taken the utmost care in passing the book through the press.

The hymnal section is made up of the pick of the books, and, unlike all modern collections, this particular one contains very few new tunes, not more than half-a-dozen, perhaps. In the process of revision the book has been purged of most of its former defects. One, however, has been allowed to remain—the mating of the hymn for children, 'God, Who hath made the daisies,' with Mendelssohn's four part song 'O hills! O vales of pleasure.' The simplicity of the hymn is totally at variance with the music, regarded from a child's point of view, apart from the artistic principle involved; fortunately, however, an alternative tune is suggested, which is sure to be largely taken advantage of.

The twelve selected prose psalms have been pointed with the use of super-imposed notes, a system suggested by Miss Maria Hackett seventy-five years ago. Its application in 'Church Praise' appears to have been in the nature of an afterthought, as in the earlier part of the book (Nos. 21, 53, 359) heavy type has been used for certain words, with the result that these pages are typographically disfigured.

Apart from one or two blemishes—and what hymnal is perfect?—the new edition of 'Church Praise' reflects great credit upon all concerned in its compilation, especially upon the Rev. J. M. E. Ross, the capable general editor. The book is sure to become a very valuable aid in the services of the church for which it has been so thoughtfully prepared.

BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS.

The Pall Mall Gazette of December 14, in noticing a performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio at St. Anne's Church, Soho, said:

One would like to see the example set by St. Anne's followed by many other churches. Besides this oratorio and the Passion Music, there are a great number of church cantatas of Bach for all seasons of the year, and it is difficult to understand why they are not performed more frequently. No greater interest could be offered to a church choir than the practice and performance of one of these beautiful compositions: they are not appreciated for the simple reason that they are not known.

A new organ, built by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons, has been completed in Childwall Church, near Liverpool, as a memorial to the Gladstone family. In the quiet burying place is the grave of Mr. W. T. Best, where, to quote from the simple inscription, his body 'rests in hope.'

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung with its accustomed reverence and impressiveness at St. Paul's Cathedral on the evening of December 3, under the skilful direction of Sir George Martin, whose effective setting for chorus and orchestra of 'Out of the deep' (De Profundis) opened the service. The work was beautifully rendered by the cathedral choir accompanied by a full orchestra, while Mr. Charles Macpherson, sub-organist of the cathedral, ably presided at the organ. The Advent hymn, 'Lo, He comes with clouds descending, was sung to the time-honoured tune 'Helmsley.' An immense congregation listened to the simple strains of Spohr with evident appreciation of their melodiousness.

A choral festival was held at St. Peter's Church, Oxford Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on November 29, by the choirs of the churches of St. Andrew, St. Peter Jesmond, and St. George. The music sung included Stainer's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat, Wesley's anthem, 'Ascribe unto the Lord,' and Stanford's Te Deum in B flat. The united choirs, numbering about 150 voices, were conducted by Mr. James M. Preston; Mr. T. W. Ritson presided at the organ. With the exception of 'Sleepers, wake!' the music on this occasion was entirely by English composers, including a selection of organ music played before the service.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung at All Saints' Church, Hatcham Park, on Sunday, December 1, under the direction of Mr. C. T. Couch, organist and choirmaster of the church. The following interesting selection of music was performed in the chapel of St. John's College, Cambridge, on Sunday evening, December 1, under the direction of the organist, Mr. C. B. Rootham, with Mr. Ronald Hurry at the organ:

Psalm 150, for chorus and organ Concerto in D minor, for organ and orchestra Soloist, Dr. Alan Gray. .. César Franck. .. Handel. . .

Reviews.

A History of Music in England. By Ernest Walker, M.A., D. Mus.

[Oxford: The Clarendon Press.]

Dr. Ernest Walker is a well-read musician and has the pen of a ready writer. He has produced an interesting and readable book that is full of information and admirably compiled. Except when his judgments are warped by prejudice, his criticisms are sound and fair-minded. Although, to quote from the preface, 'the book has been designed from the standpoint of a musician rather than from that of an antiquarian (sic), and even then more for the general musiclover than the technically erudite,' the student may turn to its pages with advantage, especially if he disregard the author's proneness to destructive criticism.

Nothing could be better than the chapter on 'The Madrigalian Era,' the longest as it is the best in the volume. From beginning to end it is excellent and may be read with profit and edification. To quote Dr. Walker's concluding words: 'there can be no doubt that the concerted vocal music of the chief men of the time [the madrigalian period] represents the supreme flower of English art. . . . Limited by necessary historical conditions as their technical resources are, they can between them cover a wide range of emotional expression, and portray it from end to end with a subtle directness and a steady distinctiveness that place their work very high among the things worthy of permanent remembrance by musicians of all nationalities, and not least by their sometimes too forgetful countrymen. They can look in the face any composer who has ever lived; if they are not among the few supreme divinities, they are at any rate Titans among the earth-born.'

The twenty-five pages devoted to 'Handel in England' are more controversial. While Dr. Walker justly pays high tribute to many of Handel's beautiful but neglected opera songs, he is evidently not altogether favourably disposed towards the composer of 'The Messiah.' 'The old idol,' he says, 'hurled down somewhat indignantly from the impossible position that he formerly occupied, is in some danger of being relegated to the rubbish heap. But it would be a million pities if "The Messiah" were to disappear into the limbo of those artistic works for which the relatively unmusical public retains a superstitious reverence long after the musicians themselves have come to a final, and on the whole—at any rate in comparison—an adverse judgment. Dr. Walker, although a comparatively young man, need have no fear that 'The Messiah' will find its way to the 'rubbish-heap' during his lifetime. The two chapters on Victorian Music do not maintain the level of excellence reached in the earlier portions of the book, although they contain much that calls for commendation the warm appreciation of the Wesleys, for instance. It is absurd, however, to speak of Henry Smart's compositions as 'pleasing Sunday-school music'-does the Te Deum in F come within this category?—and the depreciation of recently deceased musicians is in strong contrast with the judicial dignity which characterizes the critical tone of many previous pages. A chapter on 'Folk-music' and a final one on 'General characteristics' conclude a volume which, with certain shortcomings, is a distinct contribution to English musical literature. There are copious musical examples some of which, being printed in short score, are, however, very confusing-and, we are glad to notice, they have an index all to themselves.

We venture, in view of a reprint of the book, to point out one or two errors. Sir George Macsarren did not edit Handel's 'Theodora' (p. 202), nor did Ouseley edit the complete works of Orlando Gibbons (p. 260); Sterndale Bennett was not a pupil of Mendelssohn, as is stated by inference on p. 268; and it seems strange, in a book written by an Oxford don and printed at the Clarendon Press, to find the term 'Cathedral chancel' (p. 265). Dr. Walker, on p. v. of his Preface, says: 'in an examiner idden account of the property inclined to attach an examiner. ridden age we are far too much inclined to attach an altogether ridiculous and harmful importance to parrot-like memorizing of mere dates and facts, that can never be more than the dry bones of a living art. Having read this, it is with considerable trepidation that we venture to call attention to a few wrong dates. Playford's 'A breefe introduction to the skill of musick' was first published in 1654, not 1653 (p. 123)—a facsimile reproduction of the title-page of this rare book appeared in The MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1906; Daniel Purcell died in the year 1717, not 1718 (p. 138); and Sir Hubert Parry was elected to the Professorship of Music at Oxford in 1899, not 1900 (p. 285). These 'dry-bones' may be considered 'altogether ridiculous and harmful,' but accuracy, even in 'A History of Music in England,' is not without its advantages.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

Old English Violin Music. Edited by Alfred Moffatt. No. 1, Sonata in G major, by James Lates; No. 2, Sonata in D minor, by Henry Eccles; No. 3, Sonata in B flat major, by William Babell; No. 4, Sonata in G minor, by John Stanley; No. 5, Sonata in A major, by John Collett; No. 6, Trio-Sonata in E minor, by T. A. Arme.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Lovers of ancient music have a rich and delightful store provided for them in this Old English Violin Music edited by Mr. Alfred Moffatt. Six numbers of the series have already been published, and if the succeeding works maintain the same high level of excellence of this first set of pieces the collection will be one of great value and historical interest. As the Editor remarks, considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of church music, glees and madrigals, organ and even harpsichord music by the older English composers; but very little has been done to make known the mass of music for the violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century.

No. 1 is a Sonata in G major by James Lates, a name, like other composers in this series, more or less unfamiliar. According to the biographical notes which preface these pieces. Lates lived from 1710-77, and resided chiefly in Oxford. He received his musical education from the first masters in Italy, and was an excellent violinist, leading the concerts at the University city with credit. For some years he held a lucrative professional situation at Blenheim, under the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. The Sonata under notice has been arranged from 'Six solos for a violin and violoncello with a thorough Bass for the harpsichord,' published about 1768. It consists of a fine opening Allegro, an expressive Largo in C minor, and an energetic and spirited Rondo in the main key.

No. 2 is a Sonata in D minor by Henry Eccles, born about 1670, and a member of the King's Band from 1710-16. In the latter year he migrated to Paris, and entered the French king's private orchestra. Eccles's playing excited much admiration in Paris, where he resided until his death in 1742. He wrote several sonatas for the violin, and the work now for the first time resuscitated is a fine example of its class. Beginning with a beautiful and plaintive Adagio, a brisk and jovial Allegro follows, the whole concluding with an expressive Largo, and an Allegro in the form of a Gigue; altogether this is a most captivating work.

No. 3 is a Sonata in B flat major by William Babell (1690-1723), a pupil of the celebrated Dr. Pepusch; he was for some years organist of All Hallows' Church, Bread Street (where he is buried), and also a member of George the First's private band. He appears to have been not only an excellent violinist but a fine performer on the harpsichord. According to Johann Mattheson—with whom Handel fought his celebrated duel—he surpassed even the great composer of 'The Messiah' as an executant on the organ. The Sonata in B flat consists of a Preludio, Giga, Air, Hornpipe à l'Inglese, and Gavotte. The movements are rather short: but the dances are delightfully bright and sportive, and the Preludio and Air full of refined melody.

No. 4, a Sonata in G minor, is by John Stanley, the celebrated blind composer and organist. Stanley's sonata—in four movements, a Preludio, Allegro, Andante and Tempo di Giga—is in every respect a very fine work.

No. 5 is a Sonata in A major by John Collett. No biographical particulars have been discovered concerning him, but this work is the second of six sonatas printed for the author about 1755. The opening Allegro is particularly Symphony.

vivid and pleasing, and the following Large in excellent contrast. The Finale, a movement in six-eight rhythm, is full of vivacious animation and 'go,' and is carried into the fifth position. The preceding works never exceed the third position, No. 3 going no higher than the first; but with modern proficiency in phrasing and sliding, the editor has judiciously suggested throughout a more advanced form of fingering than the mere actual position of the notes might require. Mr. Mossatt is an expert in violin editing, and his workmanship in the violin parts and in the pianoforte accompaniments arranged from the old figured-basses deserves high commendation.

The last number of the series is a Trio-Sonata for two violins, violoncello (ad lib.) and pianoforte by the celebrated composer of the immortal 'Rule, Britannia,' Dr. Thomas Augustine Arne. The Sonata probably dates from the year 1740, and is the last of a set of seven similar works. It contains four movements—Siciliano, Moderato, Largo, and Allegro—and will prove quite effective even without the violoncello, although much additional interest will be given by the inclusion of that instrument.

It has been a real pleasure to study these fascinating old works. Without a dull or tedious passage from beginning to end, one cannot but comment on the pure, healthy, vigorous and joyous tone displayed by our English composers of the 17th and 18th centuries. Thanks are due to Mr. Mossatt for rescuing these examples from the musty-dusty recesses of our museums and bringing them into the light of the present day. They can well stand its fullest glare!

A History of the Bradford Festival Choral Society: from its formation in 1856 to its jubilee in 1906. By G. F. Sewell.

[Bradford: G. F. Sewell.]

The author of this interesting book is one of those veteran Yorkshire music-lovers of whom any county might be proud. As one of the original members of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, who more fitting than he to write its history? This task he has discharged with commendable skill, although he was to some extent handicapped by the earliest records, covering the first twenty years, having been lost; that was before he became the secretary, twenty-five years ago. The Society owes its origin to the enthusiasm of the late Samuel Smith, Mayor of Bradford in 1849, when Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was first performed (complete) in Bradford on December 7 of that year, and when the gallery was nearly filled with factory operatives. The completion of St. George's Hall, on August 27, 1853, gave an impetus to choral music in Bradford, and the Festival Choral Society was duly formed in 1856.

The first president was Mr. Samuel Smith, and the first conductor, William Jackson, of Masham, who was paid five shillings for each rehearsal, £1 113. 6d. for each concert 'in town,' and two guineas for outside engagements of the Society. 'Coffee and buns' were provided from the Society's funds for those members of the choir who came from a distance, the cost of these refreshments in one year amounting to the sum of £40 135. 10d. In 1858 the Society had the proud distinction of singing before Queen Victoria. and the Court at Buckingham Palace. Their first concert with orchestra was given in 1862, and these Bradford singers had the honour of introducing Beethoven's Choral Symphony into Yorkshire on March 14, 1873. The pitfalls of programme-making are amusingly shown when, in 1872, the Burmese Ambassadors visited Bradford and a concert was given in their honour. On that occasion the programme included 'Rule, Britannia' and 'Come, if you dare'!

The conductors of the Society have included William Jackson (already mentioned, and the composer of 'The Year,' 'The Deliverance of Israel,' and other works), R. S. Burton, Edward Hecht, Dr. J. C. Bridge, and Mr. R. H. Wilson. The present conductor is Dr. F. H. Cowen. The Society has provided contingents of singers for festivals at Hereford, Gloucester and Chester, and in the jubilee year the Society sang, by invitation, at the London Philharmonic Society's concert of May 17, 1906, when it fully maintained its reputation in Bach's motet 'Sing ye to the Lord' (unaccompanied), and in Beethoven's Choral Symphony. The Society owns the autograph of one of Schubert's String quartets, bearing date 1813, but no further details are given (on p. 230) whereby it can be identified.

In addition to its main theme, the book gives a brief account of the Bradford Subscription Concerts and of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra—in fact, while it is a volume of supreme local importance, this record of 'something attempted, something done' is a valuable addition to the musical history of Yorkshire, and indeed to that history of music in England which has yet to be written. Many portraits of local worthies and a list of concerts in which the Society has taken part since its formation in 1856, add to the completeness and interest of a book which is heartily welcomed and upon which its author is to be congratulated. Other musical societies who are approaching their jubilee may well take a leaf out of Mr. Sewell's book as a recipe of 'how to do it.'

ANTHEMS.

In divers tongues spake the Apostles. By Palestrina. My soul, O praise the Lord thy God. By J. S. Bach. Take My yoke upon you. By Thomas Adams. Jesu, meek and lowly. Jesu, Lord of life and glory. By Edward Elgar. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The period from Palestrina to Elgar practically covers the entire field of church music, and great is the difference in the mode of expression as sacred song has travelled down the ages; but the above group of anthems shows clearly that although the letter changes the spirit remains.

'In divers tongues' is a very fine example of the great

Italian composer. The text consists of verses 4 and 11 of Acts ii., paraphrased by Mr. W. G. Rothery, and the music has been judiciously edited by Mr. John E. West. The choral writing is in four parts. As the music is to be sung unaccompanied, well-trained singers are required to do it justice. The progressions are easy to read, but they are purely contrapuntal and demand firm attack to realize the dignity and solidity of the music.

The anthem by Bach, which has had the editorial skill of Mr. John Pointer, is taken from the cantata 'Gott lob! Nun geht das Jahr zu ende.' The part-writing is extremely interesting, for it largely consists of a florid counterpoint on a canto fermo, comprising the first phrase of the melody commonly known as the 'Old 100th' Psalm tune. This is given out in sections successively by the different voices, while those not so engaged supply countersubjects. The composer subsequently starts a new theme which is treated with great skill and fluency until an imposing conclusion is reached.

Take My yoke upon you,' by Thomas Adams, is a short, full anthem for general use. The sacred words are allied to gracious music, richly harmonized and well laid out for The conclusion is impressive.

The text of the first of the above anthems by Sir Edward Elgar is by the Rev. Henry Collins. It is a prayer for forgiveness and intercession, and the deep devotional spirit of the lines is echoed with reverent feeling in the music, in several passages with an intensity that amounts to fervour. The words of the second anthem are by J. Cummins, and are allied to music of a more confident character, but the devotional spirit is very evident, and a fine climax is built up towards the close, which, however, comes in whispered reverence.

Odituary.

The following deaths are recorded with regret:

On November 28, at 5, Hillside Mansions, Jackson's Lane, Highgate, MR. EDGAR BRINSMEAD, aged fifty nine. The younger son of Mr. John Brinsmead, founder of the pianoforte manufacturing firm which bears his name, he wrote a 'History of the Pianoforte,' first published in 1868, and re-issued in 1879. At one time Mr. Brinsmead, who, in spite of his blindness, was an active member of the firm, directed his attention to improving the tone of violins, but the idea was not further developed.

On December 6, suddenly, at Harrogate, Dr. EDWIN JOHN CROW, aged sixty-six. Born at Sittingbourne, Kent, he was a chorister of Rochester Cathedral under Dr. J. L. Hopkins, to whom, and to John Hopkins, he was afterwards articled. At Leicester Dr. Crow held successively three organist appointments—at Trinity, St. Andrew's, and St. John's Churches. On January 1, 1874, he entered upon his duties as organist of Ripon Cathedral, a post he held till 1902. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists in 1868, graduated, at Cambridge, Mus. Bac. in 1872, and Mus. Doc. in 1882. Of late years he did much examining work for the Incorporated Society of Musicians. The remains of Dr. Crow, who was an ardent Freemason. were interred in Bilton churchyard, Harrogate.

On December 6, at Chatham, Mr. JACOB ADAM KAPPEY, aged eighty-one. Born at Bingen, he came to England in 1848, and in 1857 was appointed bandmaster of the Royal Marines (Chatham Division), a post he held with distinction for many years. He composed an opera and a cantata, and for a period of more than thirty years he edited Boosey's Military Journals. He contributed to the first edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' his most important article being 'Wind Band,' and was the author of an interesting and important book entitled 'Military Music: a history of wind instrumental hands,' which Messrs. Boosey a history of wind-instrumental bands, which Messrs. Boosey published in 1894.

On December 9, at Montreux, OTTO PEINIGER, aged sixty-one. A native of Elberfeld, he studied the violin at Paris and Leipzig, and was a pupil of Joachim. Since 1872 he has been violin master at Harrow School. In addition to being an excellent violinist and teacher, Mr. Peiniger was the author of a well-known method for the violin, and he composed many pieces for the instrument.

The following well-known foreign musicians died towards the close of last year: GAETANO BRAGA, aged seventy, composer of the famous 'Serenata.'-JRAN BAPTIST CHARLES DANCLA, at Tunis, aged eighty-eight, a famous violinist.—WILHELM TAFFERT, at Südende, near Berlin, aged seventy-seven, a distinguished writer and musical critic, and the author of a Wagner-Lexikon (1887) which contained all the impolite and opprobrious terms used by the enemies of Wagner.

The Aberdeen Choral Union gave an impressive performance of Brahms's German Requiem on December 3, when the work was heard for the first time in the North of Scotland. The soloists were Miss Betty Booker and Mr. Francis Harford, and Mr. Arthur Collingwood conducted. On December 13 the University Society gave the first concert of its season. In addition to some choral items the programme included Schubert's 'Fierrabras' and Mackenzie's 'Little Minister' overtures; Elgar's 'Sursum Corda' for organ, strings and brass; part of Mozart's G minor symphony; and Dvorák's 'Sclavische Tanze,' Set 1, No. 4. Professor C. Sanford Terry conducted. A feature of a concert recently given in Aberdeen by the Scottish Orchestra was the performance of Max Bruch's Violin concerto by Mr. G. S. MacKay, a member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra. Dr. Frederic Cowen ably conducted a fine programme which included Mozart's 'Splendente Te, Deus' sung by the Choral Union.

SPANISH MUSIC.

The Rev. H. Cart de Lasontaine read another interesting paper on Spanish Music at the Musical Association on December 18. The lecturer treated, firstly, of Oriental music in its relation to and influence on the Spanish School; secondly, he referred to the unique character of the gipsy music of Spain; and lastly gave a short introductory account of that vast subject, the dance music of Spain. The following is an epitome of the Rev. H. Cart de Lasontaine's discourse.

A careful examination of Arabian music will convince us that, between the compositions of a bygone age belonging to the time of the Moslem domination in Spain, and the popular music of various provinces, notably in the South, there is a close and intimate connection. So far as the instruments now used in Spain in village merrymakings, and the instruments employed by the Arabs to accompany their songs and dances, are concerned, there is indeed little if any change during the progress of the intervening years. The only difference that can be accentuated in this direction is—as we are told in Alfarabi's celebrated treatise, written about the middle of the 9th century—in the infinite number and variety of the Eastern instruments. Information about the gipsy music is very difficult to obtain, and would almost seem to demand a daily contact with this strange people. The gipsies in Spain have been known as the New Castilians and Flemings, as also by the peculiarly native title of 'Flamencos.' Many people are seeking to know the real inner purpose of this latter term, but not even a Spaniard can fully explain to you what he means by the word. Many of the inhabitants of Spain have never seen or heard certain gipsy dances or songs, with which the unsuspecting tourist, gulled by the flashy attractions of the 'café chantant, imagines himself to be perfectly familiar. The gipsy songs are nearly always mournful in character, and instinct with a are nearly always mournful in character, and instinct with a sense of gloomy foreboding. The most characteristic of their songs and dances is the 'Seguidilla'; this is the purest musical product of the race. The expression 'Cantos Flamencos' stands for a wide collection of compositions ranging from the 'solea' or 'soledad,' a melancholy song and dance in a minor key, to the 'tona' and 'living a' which are not dence measurer nor care have and 'liviana,' which are not dance measures, nor are they accompanied by the guitar.

The bibliography of the art of dancing is not so extensive in Spain as in adjacent countries, such as France and Italy. Amongst old Spanish dances may be named the Pavane, the Gallarda (derived from France), and the Jacara, the latter being a very noisy and roisterous measure, accompanied by singing. The verb 'pavonearse' ('to strut about with the air of a coxcomb') is derived from the peacocky attitudes adopted by the dancers in the first-named of these ancient measures. The celebrated violinist, Corelli, wrote twenty-four variations on the theme furnished by a set of dances of great popularity in Spain, viz., the 'Folias.' Many of the country dances now danced in the Peninsula can be referred back to very early times; some even discovering traces of Greek and Roman descent. In the 18th century there was a violent prejudice, in dancing as in other things, in favour of everything French, and the Court and nobles set the mode, as a consequence of which many of the most characteristic of the Spanish dances fell into a state of disorder and license, which drew down on their performers the wrath of the Church and the Inquisition. Such national dances as the 'Tirana,' the 'Polos,' and the 'Seguidillas manchegas' were popularised in other countries by their frequent introduction into the operas of Don Vicento Martin, who was born in 1754, and whose works were much in vogue in such capitals as Vienna and St. Petersburg. The dance of the Tarasca, formerly celebrated at Toledo, on the Feast of Corpus Christi, resembles an animated mystery-play, and the present-day dance of the 'Seises' before the High Altar of the Cathedral in Seville, serves to remind us of the slowly-decaying mediævalism of Spain.

remind us of the slowly-decaying mediævalism of Spain.

The lecturer illustrated his discourse by playing some characteristic fragments of Eastern music, some popular dances now used in the province of Leon, and two modern pieces by Oscar de la Cinna. Dr. Maclean was in the chair.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S ORCHESTRAL SUITE.

Special interest attended the concert of the Queen's Hall Orchestra at Queen's Hall on December 14, at which an Orchestral Suite No. 1, by Sir Edward Elgar, was performed for the first time. Entitled 'The Wand of Youth' (Music to a Child's Play), and numbered 'Op. 1A,' this work, one of Sir Edward's earliest creations, was originally written in the year 1869, when the composer was a boy of twelve. It has been revised and re-orchestrated, and is now dedicated 'To my friend, C. Lee Williams.'

The Suite, consisting of seven numbers, opens with an Overture (scored for full orchestra) which reflects the animation of children in its Allegro molto activity, though its second subject—truly Elgaresque—gives just a reflection of that shyness to which bairnies often are subject. Then follows a Serenade, delicately scored for wood-wind, two horns, drums, strings and harp, the last-named instrument playing no unimportant part in a most charming movement. No. 3 is a Minuet (Old style) having the stage direction 'The two old people enter.' The music not only happily reflects the stately movements of grandpapa and grandmama, but it shows what a master hand can do with a small orchestra-wood-wind, two horns, and strings. The 'Sun Dance,' a sprightly presto, is one of the most fascinating numbers of the work, its hurry-scurry impetuosity being relieved by an ear-haunting waltz theme that contributes to the effectiveness of a happily conceived movement. 'Two fairy pipers pass in a boat, and charm them to sleep' is the stage direction placed above No. 5, which is called 'Fairy Pipers.' One flute, one oboe, two clarinets, two horns, and strings form the instrumentation of this barcarolle piece. The first theme (in E minor) is given to the clarinets in thirds, and at the fourteenth bar the key changes to the tonic major, when the strings have a new melody.

The music of the 'Slumber Scene' (No. 6) is constructed entirely on the following three bass notes—basso ostinato, to give the technical name:

Concerning the employment of this recurrent figure, the composer says it was so written because in this particular number the regular bass player of the family orchestra was wanted on the stage, and his substitute could only play on the open strings! The dreaminess of the music is happily conveyed in the restrained orchestration—two bassoons, one horn, and strings. In this, constructive skill goes hand in hand with melodic beauty: the result is a lovely tone-poem of tender simplicity. In No. 7 'Fairies and Giants' are presented in helter-skelter music. There is no mistaking the pomposity of the giants, nor the skittishness of the fairies, in a movement which in its impetuous virility, sets its seal on a composition which will increase its composer's reputation and is sure to become popular both with orchestras and audiences.

The concert opened with Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony—the Scherzo of which was capitally played—and included Mozart's D minor Pianoforte concerto, beautifully interpreted by that eminent Mozart-player, M. Raoul Pugno, who also splendidly played the solo part of César Franck's 'Variations for pianoforte and orchestra,' while Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto No. 5, in D, for pianoforte, flute, violin and strings—the soloists being Messrs. Pugno, Fransella, and Sons—completed an enjoyable afternoon's music. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted in his usual impressive manner.

THE HUDDERSFIELD CHOIR IN LONDON.

At the concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra on December 16, Bach's great Mass in B minor was performed with the Huddersfield Festival Choir of about 230 voices as the chorus. As this choir had been trained by Dr. Henry Coward, much was expected of its co-operation with the Symphony Orchestra, and an immense audience was attracted. Of all the classic oratorios that still hold the field in this country the B minor Mass presents the most difficult problem of interpretation. A performance that excites the enthusiasm of one set of unquestionably experienced critics is damned with very faint and grudging praise in other quarters. Such differences of opinion have been provoked by the performance of the choruses on this occasion. For our part we have no hesitation in emphatically ranging ourselves with those who consider that the singing of the Huddersfield Choir was superb as regards tone, choral technique and interpretation. We have not space here adequately to particularize, but we recall the delicacy of the rhythm and the restraint exhibited in the Largo section of the Kyrie Eleison, the syncopations in which were sung as though they were performed by a fine orchestra, the awe-striking pp of the Et in terra pax section of the Gloria, and the clean finish of the succeeding florid runs. Other striking features were the wide sweep of the curves of the phrases in Gratias Agimus, the splendour of the climax in Cum Sancto Spiritu, the control of a fine pianissimo in Et Incarnatus and the exultation of the Et Resurrexit. It need scarcely be added that this splendid choir found its greatest opportunities in the Sanctus and its pendant Hosanna.

If the choruses of this Mass present, as we have said, a problem of interpretation for even the finest resources, it must be said that the solos are still more exacting. On this occasion they were battled with by Miss Perceval Allen, who was not at her best, Miss Maud Santley, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Frederic Austin. The orchestra was of course admirable, but the high-pitched trumpet parts demanded in this work, well played as they were, penetrated too keenly for our modern ears. So we still have to wait for an ideal all-round performance of this great work.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The members of the operatic class of the Royal Academy of Music showed their attainments in the concert room of that institution on December 11, when they performed Offenbach's 'Magic melody' (Chanson de Fortunio), and the first two scenes from Rossini's 'Barber of Seville.' In the former work much ability was shown by the Misses Mary Fielding, Dorothy Webb, and Kathleen MacMahon, and Mr. Cecil Pearson: and in the excerpts from Rossini's opera, by Miss Evelyn P. Dickson (who impersonated the vivacious heroine), by Mr. Maurice d'Oisly (as Count Almaviva), and Mr. J. MacNaughton Duncan (as Figaro). The ensemble did credit to Mr. Richard Temple, stagemanager, and Mr. Edgardo Levi conducted with his usual ability.

At the Students' Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall on December 12, was produced an overture entitled 'Boadicea,' composed by Mr. Montague F. Phillips, that bore testimony to musical invention and ability to handle the orchestra effectively. We should hear more of this composer. Two effective songs, respectively named 'Swedish love-song' and 'Devon to me,' from the pen of Mr. Eric Coates, were sung by Mr. F. Percival Driver. 'Devon to me' is a robust and manly ditty worthy of publication. Miss Elsie Owen, the remarkably clever little violinist, by her intelligent and expressive playing in Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' proved that she is making excellent progress, and Mr. Percy Hughes gave a good account of Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flat. The vocalists, Mrs. Alice G. Prowse, Miss Hannah Morgan and Mr. Frederick William Gregory, gave evidence of judicious training. The concert opened with the first movement from Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, the solo part of which was played with much brilliancy by Mrs. A. M. Heasman, and concluded with Wagner's 'Huldigungsmarsch.' Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted with all due solicitude and command.

The following awards have been made: Battison Haynes prize (composition) to Ethel J. Shepard (London); the Hine prize (composition) to Norah M. Cordwell (London); the Sainton-Dolby prize (sopranos) to Marie Cuyper (Calcutta): the Rutson Memorial prizes (basses) to F. Percival Driver and (contraltos) to Edith Kirk (both of Leicester); Bonamy-Dobree prize (violoncellists) to John Mundy (London); the Potter Exhibition (pianoforte) to Gilbert James Ledger (Ewhurst): the Westmorland Scholarship (singirg) to Dorothy Webb (London).

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The chief feature of the orchestral and choral concert given by the pupils of the Royal College of Music on December 10, under the direction of Sir Charles Stanford, was the first performance in London of Dr. R. Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the unknown region,' produced at the recent Leeds festival. The clever work was earnestly rendered by the executants, the instrumental portion being particularly well played. The solo part of César Franck's 'Symphonic variations' for pianoforte and orchestra was played with understanding and brilliancy by Miss Ellen Edwards, and the singing of Miss Geraldine Wilson and Mr. Arthur Wynn well deserved the hearty applause which it elicited.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Hérold's opera 'Zampa' was revived on November 25 and 26 at the Guildhall School of Music by the members of the institution's operatic class. The work, which had not previously been heard in London since the year 1870 at the old Gaiety Theatre (when the title-part was sustained by Sir Charles Santley and the tenor part by the present Principal of the Guildhall School), is one that is well-suited to young artists, for the music is melodious and essentially vocal. The name part was well sung by Mr. Wallis Anderson, the possessor of a voice and presence that should materially help him along the road to operatic success. Talent was shown by the Misses Barwell-Holbrook and Ethel P. Elmes, who severally personated the distressful heroine on the respective evenings; and the Misses Evelyn Bendy and Gertrude Ketchell were entrusted with the part of the inevitable confidential maid, giving proof therein of possessing dramatic intuition. Mention also is due of Miss Emmeline M. Coppin, who personated the statue of the unfortunate Albina Manfreda. The performances attested to careful rehearsal, and the student orchestra played the instrumental portion with great intelligence under the able direction of Mr. Richard H. Walthew.

A feature at the students' orchestral concert, held at the City of London School on December 11, was the first performance of two songs, severally named 'The secret of the sea' and 'The De'il's awa' wi' the Exciseman,' for bass voice with orchestral accompaniment, by Miss Ethel Scarborough, who conducted the rendering with confidence and ability. Miss Scarborough has also written the words of the former song, and both as poetess and composer shows much talent. The vocalist was Mr. Thomas Ranger. The other singer was Miss Barwell-Holbrook, and Miss Hilda Lett, sister of the young contralto, Miss Phillis Lett, played the solo part of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto with taste, true intonation, and executive neatness. The orchestral pieces comprised three movements from Svendsen's Symphony in D (Op. 5), and the overture to Auber's 'Zanetta,' conducted by the principal, Dr. W. II. Cummings.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

Refinement, intellectuality and cultivated talent were the prevailing features of the Ninth Patron's Fund Chamber Concert, which took place on December 6 at Bechstein Hall. The programme contained five concerted works and nine songs, from the pens of eight composers, four of whom studied at the Royal Academy, three at the Royal College, and one privately. The most important composition was a 'Characteristic trio' for pianoforte, violin, and horn (Op. 37), by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, which proved to be an interesting and significant work with a pleasing touch of romance imparted by the horn. It was effectively interpreted by Messrs. Harold Samuel, John Saunders and Ernest Button. Next in artistic importance may be placed 'Four Rossetti sonnets' for voices, pianoforte and string quartet, by Mr. Hubert Bath. The text has been well-chosen, and the spirit of the lines pervades the melodious, imaginative and admirably-written music. The vocalists were the Misses Caroline Hatchard and Fielding Roselle, and Messrs. Maurice D'Oisly and Cecil Pearson. The composer took charge of the pianoforte and the strings were played by Messrs. Parsons, Tchaikovsky and Misses Phyllis Mitchell and Gwendolen Griffiths. A Concertstück in A for string quartet, by George Dyson, was well rendered by the Cathie Quartet; and a Romance in D (Op. 5), for violoncello and pianoforte, by Felix H. White, was expressively presented by the composer and Mr. Charles Crabb. Of the vocal music 'Three old English ballets,' by Felix Swinstead, proved very pleasing, and were brightly rendered by Mr. David Brazell; and Miss Marie Wadia sang, with taste and musical feeling, refined settings by Ambrose Coviello of three of Shelley's poems. The concert concluded with an effectively-written Rhapsody in E for two pianofortes, composed by Mr. Frank Tapp, who took part in the performance, with Mr. Harold Rhodes as his colleague.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The second concert of the season was given on December 4. In pursuance of the bold policy of this Society 'to produce new works, or such works as have been unjustly neglected,' the dramatic symphonic poem 'Pompeii,' for soli, chorus and orchestra, composed by Benoit Hollander, was produced for the first time on this occasion. The libretto, by Dr. G. H. Dabbs, is founded upon Bulwer Lytton's famous novel. Obviously there is in this theme scope for thrilling drama and movement. While recognizing the poetry of much of the librettist's treatment of the story, one may question whether the long philosophical dialogues lend themselves to interesting musical treatment. Thus Arbaces (Mr. Thorpe Bates), the villain of the story, at the end of a dissertation on the advantage of realizing earthly pleasures, addressed to Ione (Miss Euneta Truscott), a maiden for whom he cherishes a hopeless passion, says:

Some, as the Nazarenes, prefer the worm,
And others stretch wild hands to clutch the flow'r.
The Nazarenes, professing that this life is but a forecast of some life to come,
Take infinite pain for after wraith of infinite pleasure in some world to be.
We, knowing well this life is all we have,
That Isis is the life of all mankind,
Her creed the sacrament of pleasure,
We enjoy!

The other characters are Nydia (Miss Esta D'Argo), Julia (Miss Edith Miller), Glaucus (Mr. Haigh Jackson), Apacides (Mr. William Waite), and the chorus represents priests, worshippers of Isis, Nazarenes, &c.

Mr. Holländer's music is generally agreeably melodious and fluent, but it rarely stirs. The themes, however interesting as music, are often without significance and congruity. There is undoubtedly considerable charm in the long love scene between Ione and Glaucus, and the music portending the catastrophe has some power. But the whole impression left by the work is not satisfactory, there is so frequently an absence of defined character in the music that creates an impression of inadequacy.

The performance was a painstaking one, and did credit to the industry of Mr. Arthur Fagge, the conductor. The soloists were carefully prepared and fairly impressive. Mr. Thorpe Bates deserves special commendation. His fervid interpretation gave a glow and interest to every bar of his part.

The audience was larger and more responsive than is usual at these concerts.

'THE KINGDOM' IN GERMANY. (BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

MAINZ.

The first German performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' was given at Mainz on December 4 by the Mainzer Liedertafel und Damengesangverein, under the direction of Professor Fritz Volbach, and proved to be a remarkable success. Their Royal Highnesses the Grand Duke, Grand Duchess, and the Landgraf of Hesse were present, and the Hall was crowded, many of the audience being unable to obtain seats.

As in the case of 'The Apostles' three years ago, it was at once evident that the choir, under the inspiring direction of Professor Volbach, had prepared the work with whole-hearted enthusiasm. The singing of the very difficult unaccompanied passages at the beginning of the third part was particularly striking, and an atmosphere of deep reverence prevailed throughout, which bore ample testimony to the earnestness with which conductor and performers alike had studied the oratorio. Professor Volbach secured a splendid reading of the introduction, and the orchestral playing generally was of a very high order.

Of the soloists Herr Breitenfeld was a most impressive Peter, and Frau Stronck-Kappel, the possessor of a clear, high soprano voice, achieved great success with the beautiful solo 'The sun goeth down.' The other parts were ably filled by Fraulein Schünemann and Herr Reimers. In the absence, through illness, of Professor Franke, of Cologne, Mr. Harold Brooke, of London, played the organ part.

Mr. Harold Brooke, of London, played the organ part.
With this concert Professor Volbach ended his connection with this Society. He has now left Mainz, after six years of splendid service, to take up his duties as Universitätsmusikdirektor in Tübingen. He bears with him the good wishes of his many friends, for he has won the affection of all who know him. Professor Volbach has done much for English music in Germany, and it is his earnest hope that in his new sphere of action he may be able to do even more.

AACHEN.

'The Kingdom' was performed at Aachen on December 19, and was received with great enthusiasm. According to our correspondent in Aachen, the audience were deeply impressed by 'the wonderful melodic flow, the dramatic tone-painting, the splendid orchestral colour, and the grand building up of the choruses, often electrifying in effect.' The solo vocalists were Frau Cecile Rüsche-Endorf, Fräulein Agnes Leydhecker, Herr Felix Senius and Herr C. Whitehill, who, with choir and orchestra, combined to give a memorable performance of Elgar's great work. The oratorio was ably conducted by Prof. Eberhard Schwickerath, whose grasp of the work with all its intricate details was masterly.

BACH'S B MINOR MASS IN SCOTLAND.

The Edinburgh Choral Union and its able conductor are to be warmly congratulated upon having introduced Bach's B minor Mass to Scotland! The performance of this stupendous creation took place in the M'Ewan Hall, Edinburgh, as one of Messrs. Paterson's series of concerts, on December 16, with pronounced success. Attack, steadiness and fine tone were marked features of the choral numbers, in which the sopranos and basses of the choir specially excelled, though all the singers were unsparing in their energies in contributing to a performance which calls for genuine appreciation. Scottish Orchestra lent valuable aid, and Mr. Bradley was an efficient organist. The soloists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Alice Lakin, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Herbert Brown, all capable and conscientious artists. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. T. H. Collinson for the pains he had taken in preparing this glorious masterpiece of the great Cantor. A crowded audience testified to the success of the performancee, specially after that wonderful conception the Sanctus. The concert worthily commemorated the jubilee year of the Edinburgh Choral Union.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT GREENOCK.

The performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' by the Greenock Choral Union, under the very able leadership of Mr. W. T. Hoeck, on December 11, was in all respects an outstanding success. The most unmistakable tribute to the work was the rapt attention from first to last of the crowded audience of about 3,000 persons, many standing throughout and all obviously enthralled. The choir of 150 voices could not of course command the effects of sheer power attainable by the larger societies, but from the opening of the concert it was clear that the true atmosphere had been secured by the conductor, and the result was an enduring artistic impression upon which Mr. Hoeck is to be warmly congratulated. Miss Phyllis Lett was an admirable exponent of the Angel's part, Mr. Webster Millar's pure and manly reading of the Gerontius music carried immediate conviction, and Mr. Walter Harvey was excellent as the Priest and Angel of the Agony. The orchestra consisted of fifty members of the Scottish Orchestra, led by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, and the semi-chorus was provided by members of Mr. Hoeck's Glasgow Choir.

LINCOLN MUSICAL SOCIETY.

Dr. G. J. Bennett's influence on music in Lincolnshire has been vastly beneficial. He has established in Lincoln itself an excellent triennial festival which centralizes the latent talent and active effort of outlying districts, and in the interregnum he busies himself with the Lincoln Musical Society, whose choral and orchestral concerts would do high credit to a city of much greater size. One of the most successful music-makings in the history of the Society was given on November 27. A concert performance of Wagner's 'Lohengrin' occupied the greater part of a special Wagner evening, completed by short excerpts from other works, such as the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' the spinning chorus from 'Tannhäuser.' It was significant to note that the hall was crowded, and the enthusiasm of the audience was unmistakable.

The first and third acts only of 'Lohengrin' were performed. Even under the best conditions concert-performances of opera rarely are satisfactory, as there must necessarily be a loss of the effects intended by the composer. Wagner especially suffers in this respect, and despite the compensating gain in choral merit and the advantage of a superb orchestra, as on this occasion, some of the music missed fire: this, be it said, only by reason of the unnatural conditions, not through any lack of sheer musical excellence. The singing of the chorus was in the highest degree clever and even brilliant. The singers were in the right dramatic mood: they articulated with unfailing clearness and tonally they attained to some magnificent climaxes. The orchestra played the score beautifully. The strings were a trifle overweighted in the 'Walkürenritt,' but otherwise there is nothing more to be said than high commendation. The soloists were Madame De Vere-Sapio, Miss Toni Seiter, Mr. John Coates (who sang the music of Lohengrin very finely), Mr. Thorpe Bates, Mr. Endersby and Mr. Charles Magrath. Dr. Bennett ably conducted and revealed a thorough knowledge of his score and a grip of his forces.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

This Society began its season with an excellent concert on November 27. The choir is about 120 strong, and the fairly well-balanced orchestra of sixty performers is complete enough to deal adequately with all ordinary orchestration. The programme on this occasion was partly designed to do honour to the memory of Grieg. It began with an appreciative performance of Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' overture, and included Grieg's 'At the cloister gate,' for soprano and alto soli, female-voice chorus and orchestra; 'Recognition of land' ('Landerkennung'), for baritone solo, male chorus and orchestra; the 'Peer Gynt' suite (No. 1); and some of the lamented composer's songs, all of which received justice.

The first performance of the revised version of the 'Song of Harold Harfager,' ballad for baritone solo, male chorus and orchestra, composed by Mr. John l'ointer, was a welcome tribute to the work of a rising English composer. The music is vigorous and aptly reflects the grim ruggedness of the poem. There is not a surfeit of this kind of music for male-voice choirs, and therefore Mr. Pointer's work should be a popular addition to the repertory. It was very well performed, and was received with enthusiasm.

Other items of the programme were the '1812' overture of Tchaikovsky, the part-songs 'Twilight' and 'The pedlar,' both by C. Lee Williams, and 'The snow' by Elgar. Mr. William Higley, who specially distinguished himself in Mr. Pointer's work, was the baritone soloist, and the other principals were Miss Norah Newport and Mrs. Green Price. Mr. Ivor Atkins conducted with his usual fervour and musicianship.

'THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT MELBOURNE.

October 31 was a red-letter day in the annals of the Royal Victoria Liedertafel, who gave on that occasion the first performance in Melbourne of Elgar's oratorio 'The Dream of Gerontius,' in the Town Hall, before a vast audience which included Her Excellency Lady Northcote. The choir musicianship was further demonstrated.

—which was reinforced for the occasion by the boys of the cathedral choir—and the orchestra were under the very able conductorship of Mr. Ernest Wood. Madame Gregor Wood sang the music of the Angel, Mr. Horace Stevens those of the Priest and the Angel of the Agony, while Mr. Gregor Wood gave a highly sympathetic interpretation of the name character. The performance created an undoubtedly powerful impression.

The Melbourne Herald says: Upon last night's performance high praise may be bestowed. Mr. Ernest Wood showed himself thoroughly acquainted with all the intricacies of the composition, and evolved and sustained with admirable judgment its mystic character. The orchestra gave an excellent account of itself. The chorus evidently had been carefully trained for its important and difficult task. In intonation almost throughout satisfactory, the chorus exhibited good balance and shaded with discretion.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The setting of Longfellow's 'Hiawatha' by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor is one of the few modern works that can be relied upon to draw a large audience to the Albert Hall, and therefore it is natural that it should frequently be performed by the Royal Choral Society. Familiarity with the choruses resulted in their being given with exceptional precision on November 28, especially the chorus beginning 'Very boastful was Iagoo,' which was delivered with great spirit, while the tragedy of Minnehaha's death was thrillingly told, and the conclusion most impressively sung. The soloists were Miss Esta d'Argo, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Frederic Austin. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted with his usual skill.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

At the concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall on December 2, Herr Max Fiedler conducted. The 'Oberon' overture enabled this energetic conductor to show his intimate knowledge of the score and complete command of the orchestra. These qualities were applied to fine performances of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony and the overture to 'Tannhäuser.' M. Jacques Pintel did not make a great impression by his performance of Schumann's A minor Pianoforte concerto. Considerable fluency and some delicacy were displayed, but hardly the poetry and charm which this well-known concerto can be made to yield. An interesting feature of the concert was the performance by the soli wind of Beethoven's 'Rondino' for oboes, clarinets, bassoons and horns—two of each instrument. The playing was exquisite. The concert on December 16, in which the Huddersfield Choir took part, is separately noticed on page 30.

An interesting orchestral concert, introducing to London a Symphony in D and a Pianoforte concerto in G minor, and several songs, composed by Prof. Victor Bendix, took place at Queen's Hall on December 6. Prof. Bendix, a native of Copenhagen, is conductor of the Danish Concert Society, and is highly esteemed as a pianoforte teacher at the Danish Royal Academy of Music. His compositions include four symphonies, of which the one performed on December 6 is the second. It has for its sub-title 'Summer sounds from South Russia,' and was inspired by a visit to that locality. It consists of four movements, all of which are distinguished by a lively imagination, clearly and poetically expressed. The concerto is less original, but the solo part is effectively laid out for the pianoforte, which was admirably played by the composer's wife, Madame Dagmar Bendix. The songs which were sung by Mr. Paul Schmedes, proved pleasing and expressive and possess distinctive touches of nationality. The above artists gave recitals at Æolian Hall on November 29 and December 9, at which their musicianship was further demonstrated.

A fellow student of Mischa Elman under Prof. Auer, and styling himself 'Zimbalist,' made his first appearance in London on December 9 at Queen's Hall. The new-comer, stated to be only fourteen years of age, possesses musical talent and executive facility extraordinary for his years even in these days of youthful precocity. Supported by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, he played the solo part of Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto with such firmness and brilliancy as to excite enthusiastic applause. He was heard to greater advantage, however, in Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' a work that seemed to be more within the range of his expressive powers. That Zimbalist will become an artist of the first rank there can be little doubt.

Assisted by the Euphonic Orchestra, M. Prudent Pruvost, a French composer who has taken up his abode in London, gave a concert almost entirely of his own works on December 13, at Æolian Hall. The most important of these were a suite for orchestra entitled 'Bouffonne,' 'Ballet music for a fairy-tale' and 'Chant héroïque,' for orchestra and organ. In the two first-named works the aim of Mr. Pruvost has been to provide music of light and melodious character. The 'Chant héroïque' is grandiose, but scarcely impressive. Further criticism is not called for, but it should be said that the orchestration is clever and shows appreciation and command of tone-colour. Some melodious songs by the composer were sung by Miss Floyd Mylne, and Mr. Herbert H. Hainton played the violin part of a duet entitled 'Première sérénade,' for violin and pianoforte.

A young Belgian musician, Mr. Désiré Defauw, assisted by the London Symphonic Orchestra, came forward as a violinist, composer and conductor on December 16 at Æolian Hall. His 'Rhapsody Fantastique' for orchestra is more imaginative and emotional than intellectual, but a song entitled 'La douce nuit descend,' for soprano and orchestra, possesses greater musical value. Both works, which were heard for the first time in England, are skilfully and effectively scored. As a violinist the young composer was heard in Saint-Saëns's Concerto in B minor (Op. 61), which he played with good expression if somewhat roughly in exacting passages. The vocalist was Madame Sobrino, who sang with great earnestness. Mr. Walter H. Thorley conducted the concerto.

Notable advance on previous achievements was shown in the orchestral playing by the Trinity College band at the students' concert on December 18 at Queen's Hall. Under the direction of Mr. Emil Kreuz a spirited rendering was given of the overture to Sir Charles Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien' and Mr. Mottl's arrangements of a Minuet and Musettte by Rameau were also admirably rendered. A number of more or less talented young people appeared as soloists, amongst whom may be mentioned Miss Hilda Roberts (pianist), Miss Ethel Izard (violinist), and Miss Marion Pilcher, Mr. Horace Witty, and Mr. Campbell Carr (vocalists).

An interesting feature of the concerts given by the Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society on November 27, at Queen's Hall, was the performance of Hadyn's Symphony No. 3 in E flat, a delightfully naïve and cheery work of the old master, which was admirably rendered under the direction of Mr. Arthur W. Payne. The programme also contained Grieg's seldom heard but interesting and imaginative suite formed from his incidental music to Björnson's tragedy, 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' first produced at Christiania in 1872. The soloists were Madame Fischer Sobell, who played with much refinement in Schumann's great Pianoforte concerto, and Miss Esther Palliser, who sang with much charm. The male-voice choir, under the direction of Mr. Munro Davison, gave highly effective renderings of the madrigals 'The river spirit's song' (Pearsall), and 'Down in a flow'ry vale' (Festa); and the part-songs 'Feasting I watch' and 'After many a dusty mile' (Elgar), 'The life-boat' (Hatton), and 'Give a rouse' (Bantock).

The Strolling Players, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Ivimey, gave a 'Ladies' Night' at Queen's Hall on December 12, when praiseworthy renderings were secured of Svendsen's episode 'Carnival in Paris,' and Moszkowski's vivacious suite 'In foreign parts.' A feature of the concert was the clever pianoforte and violoncello playing respectively by Masters Jan and Mischel Charniavsky. The vocalists were Miss Clara Evelyn and Mr. Frederick Blamy.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Three notable chamber concerts were given respectively on November 29, December 2 and 4, at Bechstein Hall, by the St. Petersburg String Quartet, a party of players consisting of Messrs. Boris Kamensky, Naum Kranz, Alex Bornemann and Sigis Butkewitsch. The most interesting programme was submitted on the last-named date, when the selection consisted of Tchaikovsky's Quartets, respectively in D (Op. 11), in F (Op. 22) and E flat minor (Op. 30). In these works, not unnaturally, the Russian artists were heard at their best, and the interpretations emphasised the characteristics of the music. The playing was distinguished by great verve and volume of tone, if it occasionally lacked finish. The party will revisit London in the spring.

Herr von Weingartner, assisted by the Rebner Quartet and Mr. Claude Hobday, and the vocalists Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Dr. Theodor Lierhammer, gave a concert of his compositions, including the Pianoforte sextet in E minor (Op. 33), on December 2, at Bechstein Hall. The concert left the impression that Herr von Weingartner's most attractive music is to be found in his songs.

At the chamber concert given by the London Trio on December 6, at Æolian Hall, was played for the first time in England a Pianoforte trio in F by a young Swiss composer named Valkmar Andreas. The work bears witness to melodic invention, reverence for accepted models and refined musicianship, combined with a modesty that seems to have prevented the writer essaying more ambitious flights. Interpreted in a finished manner by Madame Goodwin, Mr. Simonetti and Mr. Whitehouse, the work obviously made a favourable impression. The vocalist was Miss Maria Stark, who was most successful in songs by Schubert and Brahms.

A pleasant recollection of the Hambourg chamber concert on December 12 is the performance of a String quarter composed by Mr. Balfour Gardiner. The work is in one movement, but its length makes no undue strain on the attention of the listener. The melodiousness of the themes, the clearness of their treatment, and the general effectiveness of the part-writing caused the quartet to be most heartily applauded. A Pianoforte quintet in F, by Mr. d'Erlanger, was also included in the programme, and the artistic singing of Mr. Paul Schnieder afforded much enjoyment.

MODERN FRENCH MUSIC.

On December 6 and 7, respectively at Leighton House, Kensington, and Bechstein Hall, were performed some remarkably interesting examples of modern French chamber music. The first performance opened with a Pianoforte quartet in A, composed by Ernest Chausson, who lived from 1855 to 1889. The quartet must have caused many listeners to regret the early death of the composer, as the work is full of graceful fancies and effective passages. Very different was the String quartet by Maurice Ravel, that concluded the concert, this being music chiefly remarkable for vagueness of significance, incoherence, and weird harmonic eccentricities. At the performance at Bechstein Hall were played G. Fauré's Pianoforte quartet in C, and Debussy's String quartet No. I. The strings were in the hands of the Parisian Quartet, and the pianist was Mr. Ricardo Viñes, who at each concert contributed some solos. A characteristic selection of French songs was vivaciously interpreted by Miss Hélène M. Luquiens.

VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL RECITALS.

Ernst Lengyel, the wonderful boy-pianist, whose portrait appeared in our last issue, gave further proof of his remarkable powers at his recital at Bechstein Hall on November 25, when he played Liszt's difficult Sonata in B minor with marvellous technique and poetic insight for so young a performer. Lengyel, who is only fourteen, excited hardly less wonder by his masterly interpretations of Bach, Haydn, Beethoven, Mozart, and Chopin. Will he become a second Liszt?

Amongst the numerous recitals that took place during the past month, the most remarkable were those of Mr. Ysaye on December 4 and 11 at Queen's Hall. With his brother, Mr. Théophile Vsaye at the pianoforte, the Belgian virtuoso gave on the first occasion a superbinterpretation of the violin part of Bach's Sonata in A, the intellectual acumen and emotional warmth of the rendering revivifying the old master's music. The second concert opened with a remarkably fine rendering of César Franck's Sonata in A for violin and pianoforte. His programme also included an interesting Chaconne for violin and organ, composed by Tomasso Antonio Vitali, son of the famous Giovanni B. Vitali. In the latter work Mr. Ysaye was associated with Mr. F. Shaw at the great organ.

Miss Elsie Horne, at her pianoforte recital on December 14 at Æolian Hall, introduced some interesting studies entitled 'The four winds,' composed by Mr. II. Farjeon. Though these studies are 'trifles light as air,' they are imaginative and not without poetical touches. The 'East wind' is portrayed as of spiteful temperament, to which the 'West wind' provides an acceptable contrast. The 'South wind' is of a meditative turn and dreams its life away, while the 'North wind' is represented as a destructive blast of boisterous importance. The studies were admirably interpreted by Miss Horne, whose skill and musical feeling were further shown in the performance of several well-known works.

Some vocal recitals should not pass without record. Notably that given by Mr. Reinhold von Warlich at .Eolian Hall on December 10. The young artist is gifted with a bass voice of remarkable musical and resonant quality, and his interpretations of Cornelius's beautiful 'Christmas Songs' and Schumann's 'Liederkreis' (Wreath of songs) were instinct with sensitive and poetic feeling. He was sympathetically accompanied by Mr. Rudolf Zwintscher.—Miss Alys Bateman sang in finished manner an excellent selection of songs before a distinguished audience at .Eolian Hall on December 12.—Mention is also due of the Misses Marie Wadia and Mary Winifred's vocal and violin recital on December 10 at Bechstein Hall.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The Saturday afternoon concerts at the Crystal Palace do not call for detailed notice. They chiefly consist of recitals of familiar works by well-known artists, but it should be recorded that on November 30 the British Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hamilton Harty, made its first appearance at Sydenham, when the programme contained the composer-conductor's 'Comedy' overture and 'Ode to a Nightingale,' the vocal part of the latter being sung by Madame Agnes Nicholls, as on the production of the work at the recent Cardiff Festival. There was also played J. Tausch's concerto for six kettle-drunns, the soloist being Mr. Gabriel Cleather, who became a very busy man during the performance.

A spirited performance of Goring-Thomas's cantata 'The sun worshippers' was given by the choir and orchestra of the City of London College on December 5, conducted by Mr. W. G. Rothery. The solos were rendered with much effect by Miss Ethel Williams and Mr. Henry Plevy.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, December 15, 1907.

Our new orchestra has brought before our notice the four overtures composed by Wagner in his young days. They were performed, and with unaccustomed success, under the direction of Oscar Nedbal. The overtures to Theodor Apel's 'Columbus' and the one to Raupach's 'König Enzio,' attracted attention, but the main feature of 'Rule, Britannia,' also of 'Polonia,' was mere noise.

Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' cantata created a very deep and overpowering impression on the audience at the performance by the Singakademie, under the direction of Richard Wickenhausser, who has furnished a German text in place of the original one in Bohemian. The excellent soloists were Fraulein Eva van der Osten (who specially distinguished herself) and Herren Burian and Plaschke. The performance aroused great enthusiasm, which was intensified by the fine singing of the choir, especially towards the close of the work. Very different was the effect produced by the Debussy works performed by the Philharmonic Society and by the Concert Society.

An historical concert was organized by the International Society of Music, illustrating music of the 17th century, especially that associated with the Viennese court. The attractive programme included a madrigal by Kaiser Ferdinand III., and vocal and instrumental works by his successors Josef I. and Leopold I., and various compositions by the capellmeisters of these sovereigns. Petri, the Dresden leader, gave an admirable rendering of Mozart's so-called 7th Violin concerto, but as most connoisseurs doubt its genuineness, enjoyment of the music was considerably marred. On the other hand a Symphony in E flat by Carl Ph. Emanuel Bach, hitherto unknown, produced by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, proved attractive. Lovers of music for wind instruments spent a pleasant evening at the chamber concert arranged by Ary van Leeuwen, flautist, and several of his colleagues at the Opera House. A Bach cantata with accompaniment for three flutes, a chamber duet by Handel for two oboes, the trio for pianoforte, flute, and bassoon which Beethoven wrote at Bonn in his young days, and Haydn's 'Divertimento' for eight wind instruments -in which occurs the 'St. Antoni' Chorale on which Brahms wrote such masterly variations—were all admirably rendered. Emil Sauer at his farewell concert performed a Pianoforte concerto by Sgambati. It was a fine display of virtuosity, and, in fact, we admired the reproductive even more than the creative artist.

A new organ has been erected in the hall of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, the previous instrument, built by Ladegast, having been here since 1872. The new organ, by Rieger, one of the best Austrian builders, contains seventy-one sounding stops distributed between four manuals and pedal, 5,130 pipes, and electro-pneumatic mechanism. At the inauguration ceremony Josef Labor, Rudolf Dillrich, and Georg Valker performed various works by Bach, Schumann, Brahms and Reger.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Brodsky Quartet from Manchester gave two chamber concerts for the Queen's College Society on December 6 and 7. At the former concert Mr. S. Speelman played a Romance for viola solo composed by his brother, and being a perfect master of his instrument did every justice to the composition, which is a very tuneful and musicianly work. Grieg's only string quartet was also played at this concert, but Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 127) was the pièce de resistance of the second concert and, as its difficulties place it quite out of the reach of ordinary players, the splendid playing of such masters revealed its beauties for the first time to most of the audience. Madame G. Drinkwater and Miss F. Moore were the respective vocalists at these enjoyable music-makings.

The Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Hans Richter, gave a most interesting orchestral concert on December 10. The programme—almost too 'advanced,' perhaps, for an audience to many of whom even the earlier and best-known symphonies and orchestral works would have been novelties—included Beethoven's fourth Symphony, Wagner's 'Faust' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures, Bach's Suite for flute and strings, and Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel.' It would be almost impertinent to praise the work of such a band under such a conductor.

The Philharmonic Society's two Christmas performances of 'The Messiah' took place on December 12 and 13, the artists being Madame Mary Conly, Miss May Armstrong, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Robert Radford. The programme gave an interesting account of the first nearly complete performance of the oratorio given in Belfast in the year 1813 under Edward Bunting, the well-known collector of Irish airs. He took some strange liberties with the order of the various numbers, and closed the concert with the 'Hallelujah' chorus, while 'Worthy is the Lamb' and the MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

'Amen' chorus appeared much earlier!

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Berlioz's 'Faust' was given by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society in the Town Hall on November 28, on the same artistic level that characterized the memorable performance by this organization in October, 1904. Indeed, Dr. Sinclair, who conducted, obtained a reading of considerable power and realism, chorus and orchestra carrying off the honours of the evening. In the preparation Dr. Sinclair had the valuable assistance of Mr. Allen K. Blackall, the chorus-master who, since his appointment, has proved himself a master of his art. The principals—Madame Mary Conly, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. Herbert Parker and Mr. Dalton Baker—materially helped to give the right colour and expressiveness to this remarkable work.

The Birmingham City Choral Society has experienced trying times since Mr. Fred. W. Beard vacated the post of conductor and chorus-master, whereby the Society had to be entirely reconstructed, Mr. Thomas Beecham, of London, being appointed conductor. The first of three concerts organized for the season was held in the Town Hall on November 27, when Mr. Thomas Beecham brought down his own New Symphony Orchestra, an admirably constituted organization which joined forces with the choir. The programme was mainly composed of unfamiliar works, the chief interest being centred in the performance of Cherubini's Requiem Mass in C minor. In Handel's Coronation anthem, 'The King shall rejoice,' the choir was not quite under control, but much better results were secured in César Franck's setting of Psalm 150. Brahms's beautiful 'Ave Maria,' for female voices and orchestra, helped to bring out the fine timbre of the sopranos and contraitos. A pleasing interlude was Mozart's Concerto in G for flute and orchestra, composed at Mannheim in 1778, the soloist being Mr. Eli Hudson, a brilliant and accomplished performer. The programme, which was far too long, also comprised Méhul's overture 'La chasse du jeune Henri,' and Dr. Charles Wood's 'Thirty-one symphonic variations on an Irish air.' The vocalist was Mr. Thomas Meux.

The Birmingham Choral Union, under Mr. Thomas Facer's excellent conductorship, gave a brilliant concert-recital of Wallace's opera, 'Maritana,' on November 23, the Town Hall being packed to overflowing. The principals comprised four prominent members of the Moody-Manners Opera Company—Miss Kate Anderson, Miss Lillian Page, Mr. John Child and Mr. Lewys James—and the rendering of the work was the best the Society has ever given.

The Midland Musical Society secured a fine performance of Beethoven's Mass in C, which attracted a large audience to the Town Hall on December 7. Mr. A. J. Cotton deserves the thanks of all music-lovers for having revived this fine work, so rarely heard and which for pure beauty of expression and melodic charm has not been surpassed. On account of the solemnity and sacredness of the subject the audience were requested not to applaud during the performance or at its close, a notice to this effect having been inserted in the programme by the able conductor. The choir and orchestra acquitted themselves in a praiseworthy manner, care having been taken to augment the orchestra by a contingent of professional instrumentalists. Special mention should be made of the fine tone-quality, attack, and phrasing of the choir. The aid rendered by the principal artists, Miss Alice Venning, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. Edwin Spooner and Mr. William Evans was, on the whole, satisfactory. Mr. C. W. Perkins occupied his accustomed post of organist. The programme also comprised Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Death of Minnehaha,' with which choir and orchestra were thoroughly familiar. The purely orchestral items included Beethoven's overture to 'Egmont,' and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite No. I.

Only passing reference can be made to the many

Only passing reference can be made to the many other concerts of a highly artistic nature that have recently been held. The second Harrison concert was principally noteworthy on account of the first appearance of M. Edouard de Reszke and little Vivien Chartres, the clever violin prodigy. Dr. Hans Richter and the Hallé band were the executive at the third concert of the season promoted by the Birmingham Orchestral Concerts Society, given in the Town Hall on December 4. Strauss's tone-poem 'Also sprach Zarathustra' received an ideal interpretation, but the chief feature was the magnificent The vocalist rendering of Beethoven's C minor symphony. The vocalist was Mr. Webster Millar. The Birmingham Concerts Society gave two concerts in the Town Hall—November 26 and December 10—both conducted by Mr. George Halford. At the first, Mr. Arthur Cooke, the clever young English pianist, created quite a sensation in Liszt's Pathetic Concerto, and at the second Mr. Johann Hock, the Dutch violoncellist, gave a splendid rendering of Dvorák's Violoncello concerto. The principal orchestral items were Beethoven's Fourth symphony and Tchaikovsky's 'Italian Capriccio.' Of great interest was the Felix Weingartner concert at the Grosvenor Room on December 6, the great conductor appearing as pianist, assisted by the Rebner String Quartet, the whole programme being devoted to Weingariner's compositions. The vocalist was Miss Gertrude Lonsdale. The Handsworth Orchestral Society gave an artistic concert in the Town Hall on December 5, under artistic conductor Mr. Johann C. Hock. The solo violinist was Mr. William Henley, whose playing created enormous enthusiasm. At the third Max Mossel drawing room concert, held at the Grosvenor Room on December 12, Miss. The Royal Society of Artists' musical matinées were brought to a close on December 7 with a harp concert, arranged by the eminent harpist, Mr. Charles Collier. The occasion was the 320th concert given under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction, covering a period of sixteen consecutive years. The novelties brought forward comprised 'Madama Butterfly' and 'La Bohème.'

The Wolverhampton Choral Society gave a praiseworthy rendering of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' at the Agricultural Hall on November 25, followed by Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' both works evidently having been carefully prepared by the conductor, Mr. H. Lyell Tayler, who showed complete control over his choral and orchestral forces. The choir is well balanced, sonorous, crisp in attack, and above all admirable in the realization of gradation of light and shade. The 'Golden Legend' can still hold its own, and will live in the hearts of the masses as long as it is presented as it was on this occasion. The principals were Miss Ethel Cadman, Madame Cecile Vicars, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. C. H. Duffield ably presided at the organ. In the graphic choral portion of Parry's remarkably clever and humorous work the choir quite caught the exhilarating spirit of the music, singing throughout with freshness of tone. The solo parts were characteristically interpreted by Mr. Turnpenney

At the first of the Wednesday concerts, on October 23, Lady Hallé and Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a recital which was largely attended. On November 20, the Norah Clench Quartet appeared, the principal item in its programme being Debussy's String quartet (Op. 10). Miss Alice Mandeville was the vocalist, and gave Schumann's 'Frauenliebe und Leben.' A fine programme was announced for November 27. Brahms's Rhapsodie for contralto and male-voice chorus, and Schubert's ever-welcome Octet, were preceded by the Funeral March from the 'Eroica' Symphony, in memory of Dr. Joachim. Both orchestra and audience stood while this tribute to the memory of a hero was being paid. An interesting note in the programme set out the special reasons for which Cambridge, and the Cambridge University Musical Society, have to reverence the name of this consummate artist and great man. It seems that after receiving an honorary degree of Doctor of Music from the University in 1877, Joachim appeared at the concerts of the Society for a period of over twenty years, until the termination of his career as a soloist, without fee. Thus in addition to the incalculable benefit that his supreme playing has conferred on so many generations of University men, he has, by his generous conduct, contributed largely to the financial stability of the Society by enabling it to form a substantial reserve

In the absence of Dr. Cowen from the fourth concert on December 3, Mr. Henri Verbrugghen occupied the post of conductor, revealing great gifts as an exponent of Brahms's Symphony in D, and securing one of the finest orchestral performances we have had this season. The crowded audience on December 10 was no doubt accounted for by the appearance of Mr. Mischa Elman as soloist. Mr. August Hyllested, a leading local pianist, played the solo part in the Concerto, and contributed some solos. Miss Jenny Young was the vocalist.

Two interesting concerts were given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society, in St. Andrew's Hall, on December 12. At the afternoon concert M. Maurice Dambois played Haydn's Violoncello concerto in D and a Tarentelle by Popper, and Mr. Plunket Greene sang Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea,' Arthur Somervell's 'Gentle maiden' and 'Trottin' to the fair.' The orchestra was heard to great advantage in Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, Schumann's Symphony in B flat, and a Suite by Bizet. At the evening concert Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Death of Minnebaha,' in which the Philharmonic Society was joined by the Norwich Choral Society, was given with great success. Miss Alice Venning and Mr. R. Joseph were the soloists. M. Dambois played Saint-Saëns's Violoncello concerto in A minor, and a 'Rhapsodie' by Liszt-Popper, and Mr. Plunket Greene contributed some songs. The orchestra played the 'Oberon' overture (Weber) and Dvorák's 'Slavonic' dances. Dr. Pates, who conducted is both concerts in the heart of the contributed some songs. Bates, who conducted at both concerts, is to be warmly congratulated upon their success.

At St. Andrew's Hall, on November 28, an excellent concert was organized by the Norwich City Police, at which the following artists appeared: Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Rosina Beynon, Mr. Ivor Foster, Mr. Gerald Allen, Miss Edie Reynolds (violin) and Miss Gwennie Mason (harp). The hall was crowded in every part and the net proceeds, which amounted to over £120, were handed over to the Norwich Police Court Mission Funds.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Nottingham Orchestral Concerts, under Mr. Allen Gill's baton, introduced as a novelty to this city the tonepoem 'Finlandia,' by Sibelius, which met with a most enthusiastic reception. Other items of interest at this concert (on December 12) were Haydn's 'Surprise' symphony, Schubert's 'Rosamunde' ballet music No. 3, in B flat, and Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture. The vocalist was Mr. McCormack.

Miss Cantelo-assisted by Signor Simonetti and Mr. Whitehouse—gave her first chamber concert on November 26, December 12 a concert of a contrasted nature took place, (Op. 50), which received a splendid performance. Miss when a programme of Weingartner's compositions, including | Cantelo herself gave a fine rendering of Beethoven's 'Appassionata' Sonata, and Mr. Whitehouse performed a violoncello solo by Boccherini.

The chief features of the Grantham Philharmonic programme on December 17 were Sullivan's 'Prodigal Son, and Meadelssohn's 'Hear my prayer.' The solos were ably sustained by Miss Marguerite Dickenson, Miss Exton, Mr. Triggs and Mr. Killey. Mr. H. P. Dickenson conducted.

Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' was the work chosen for the first concert of the twenty-first season by the Newark Philharmonic Society on December 12. The solos were taken by Madame Annie Rodford, Miss Hardwick, and Mr. Whitehorn. Mr. W. T. Wright conducted.

The second-year students at the University College, Nottingham, gave an admirable rendering on December 14 of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' with orchestral accom-paniment. Prof. Henderson, who was responsible for the training of the chorus, ably conducted the performance.

Macfarren's 'May-Day' was the chief feature of the concert given by the Gedling Choral Society on December 12, conducted by Mr. Herbert Richards.

At Melbourne the Glee and Madrigal Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' on December 19. The soloists were Madame Aston, Miss Gertrude Pegg, Mr. W. Earp and Mr. Wragg. Mr. E. M. Barber coaducted.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the term took place in the Town Hall on October 28, when Herr Backhaus, assisted by Herr Adolph Rebner (violin) and Miss Ellen Forenna (vocalist), gave an excellent concert.

On October 31, in the same building, the Town Vocal Society gave a most praiseworthy rendering of Haydn's 'Creation,' the choruses being admirably given, and the conductor, Mr. H. B. Wilsdon, must be congratulated on the success of the concert.

On November 4, in the Assembly Room, a charming concert was given by the Folk-song Quartet united with Miss Monique Poole's Instrumental Quartet. Some Pastorals for four voices by Dr. Walford Davies, with stringed accompaniment, were certainly novel and fairly effective.

On November 14, in the Town Hall and under the auspices of the Musical Club, Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Maurice Sons and Mr. Whitehouse took part in a delightful chamber concert.

Mr. Sons gave a capital rendering of Grave and Fuga' from Bach's Sonata in A minor, and Miss Fanny Davies played Brahms's 'Three Intermezzi. an encore she gave a very dainty Preludium entitled 'Cuckoo,' by Mathias Van den Gheyn, dated 1721.

On November 20, in the Sheldonian Theatre, the Professor of Music, Sir Hubert Parry, gave his terminal lecture to a keenly appreciative audience, the subject being 'Quality' as applied to music. Sir Hubert's examples, from Bach and other masters, showed that even in these days of whirl and stress, 'quality' still possessed its wonderful power. The excellent illustrations were given by Miss power. The excellent illustrations were given by Miss Honey (soprano), Mr. Byles (violin) and Mr. Samuel (pianoforte).

On November 24, in the Examination Schools, and under the auspices of the Musical Union, the Ludwig Quartet (Mesars. Ludwig, Blagrove, Hobday and Whitehouse) gave an enjoyable concert. Mr. F. C. Rowe proved a capable and pleasing singer.

The last concert of the term took place on November 29, in the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Musical Club, when the Choral and Philharmonic Societies united with the Bach Choir in an especially interesting concert, the programme including a new short setting of Psalm 137 for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra by the Cathedral organist, Dr. Harwood, the metrical version being by Thomas Campion of Elizabethan fame. The choir worked hard and well, and though the rendering, perhaps, was not quite perfect, it must nevertheless be chronicled as a great success. Dr. Harwood, who received quite an ovation at its conclusion, was, we understand, more than satisfied with the perform-ance. The other well-known piece for the chorus was St. Barnabas Choral Society ('Hymn of Praise'), under the Brahms's 'Begräbnisgesang' (Op. 13). The London Symphony Orchestra gave a fine performance of Beethoven's 'Pastoral' symphony, and also of Brahms's 'Academic'

The whole concert was ably conducted by overture. Dr. Allen.

We must not close this notice of our musical doings without saying that the Balliol Sunday evening concerts have been continued as usual during the term, under Dr. Walker's able direction.

MUSIC IN READING.

The department of music in connection with University College has taken a vigorous part in the public functions of the term, and amongst the more prominent performances in the spacious College Hall have been a pianoforte recital by Mr. E. Howard-Jones on November 21, and a vocal recital by Miss Ruth Freeman on November 27. On December 5 the choral section of the Musical Club and the College Orchestra combined to provide an excellent programme, which included the overtures to 'Jessonda' and 'Figaro,' and Haydn's 'Military' Symphony by the orchestra; Eaton Faning's 'Moonlight,' and other unaccompanied part-songs by the choir, and a fine rendering of Stanford's 'The Revenge by the combined forces. Also during the term instructive lectures, with illustrations, have been given in connection with the Musical Club of the College by the Rev. H. Bowley on 'Schumann as a song-writer,' and by Dr. Sweeting, of Winchester College, on 'Variations.' All these performances have been under the direction of Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt, the Director of Musical Studies, assisted by Mr. J. L. Liddle, conductor of the College orchestra.

The Orpheus Society gave its sixty-fourth concert at the Town Hall on November 27. The programme included a number of glees and part-songs, in the rendering of which the excellent training of the choir was apparent, and Dr. F. J. Read, the conductor, is to be congratulated on his earnest efforts. Miss Ivy Angove contributed several violin solos successfully, and Miss Dorothy Cook-Smith was the solo vocalist.

The Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the Town Hall on December 4, when Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Callirhoe' received an adequate rendering, under the conductorship of the composer, who met with a most cordial reception. For the second portion of the concert Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day was chosen, Dr. F. J. Read conducting. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Breare, who possesses a soprano voice of unusual beauty, Miss Lalla Parry and Mr. Henry Turnpenney.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

From a large number of 'Messiah' performances given during December it is only possible to refer to one—that given by the Sheffield Musical Union under Dr. Coward. This annual performance serves a valuable purpose as a model for emulation by all interested in choral progress, and many such make a pilgrimage to Sheffield to hear Dr. Coward's fine choir. The popular conductor secured a virile and interesting performance of the oratorio. soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, who sang brilliantly in 'Rejoice greatly,' Miss Katherine Jones, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Joseph Lycett. The last-named sang the bass solos with polished art and deep earnestness.

Musical life in the suburbs of Sheffield is fed and developed by a large number of small choral societies which, on the whole, do praiseworthy work. Their aims are high, and frequently surprisingly good artistic results are obtained. Among such efforts during the month have been concerts given by the Heeley Musical Union (Bridge's 'Flag of England'), under Mr. M. Tomlinson; Heeley Church Philharmonic Society ('Hiawatha's Wedding feast'), conducted by Mr. N. Whittaker; the Sheffield Choral Union, a historic old Society revived, and with a new conductor, Mr. H. Reynolds (Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' and Bridge's 'Flag of England'); Heeley Wesley Choral direction of Mr. M. Bruster, and the Norton Lees Choral Society (Bennett's 'May Queen'), directed by Mr. J. White. An Advent performance of 'The Last Judgment' in the Sheffield Parish Church, conducted by Mr. T. W. Hanforth, was an appropriate variant from the fortnightly musical evenings, usually in the form of organ recitals.

Interesting orchestral concerts have been given by the Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society conducted by Mr. J. Duffell (Dvorák's 'New world' symphony and 'Die Meistersinger' overture), and the Sheffield Philharmonic Orchestra. The latter body is usually directed by Mr. J. H. Parkes, but on this occasion be handed his baton to Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, who conducted several of his own compositions, including a new orchestral suite entitled 'The Pantomimic,' dedicated to Mr. Parkes and his orchestra.

Mr. Parkes has just issued particulars of a comprehensive orchestral scheme by which the Philharmonic orchestra will consist of three branches — probationary, amateur and professional. The project also includes a plan for the selection, printing and performance of new orchestral works (Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, adjudicator) and the formation of a musical library.

The, Sheffield Amateur Musical Society's eighty-eighth concert was given in the Albert Hall on December 18, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. Bach's Magnificat in D major and Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' furnished the large choir of the Society with abundant opportunities of proving that in the elaborate polyphony of Bach their musicianship was fully equal to all demands. A thrilling climax was reached in the difficult 'Fecit potentiam,' and the exultant strains of the 'Gloria' supplied another choral triumph. Mr. Wood gave an interesting reading of the Handel Serenata, especially in 'Wretched lovers' and 'Mourn, all ye Muses.' The soloists were Miss Jenny Taggart, Mrs. J. A. Rodgers, Mrs. J. W. Ibberson, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Robert Burnett. An admirable orchestra, which included a contingent from the Queen's Hall Orchestra, played Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and a 'Ballet-Suite' compiled from Gluck's operas by Mottl. Mr. J. A. Rodgers, the assistant-conductor, was responsible for the preparation of the choir.

Mr. Thomas Brameld continues to work wonders with the Rotherham Choral Society. The fruits of a half-season's work were reaped in an excellent performance of Mr. Coleiidge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane,' in which interesting work the choir sang with rousing spirit. Madame Amy Dewhurst was the soloist.

At Barnsley, Dr. Coward is pursuing his excellent work with the St. Cecilia Society, as was proved by its dramatic performance of Berlioz's 'Faust.'

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST OF ENGLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The choral concerts given before Christmas are generally somewhat of the nature of réunions before the Societies settle down to serious work, the result of which will be demonstrated at the Spring concerts. In many cases this year these réunions have been designedly social rather than musically serious, a programme being constituted of solos and part-songs. In some cases, however, by resuning rehearsals early and earnestly, societies have been able to give very creditable proof of renewed vitality.

THE THREE TOWNS.

First in point of date came a performance of Haydn's 'The Creation' by the Greenbank Choir, conducted by Mr. R. Lang, on October 6. The choir and orchestra numbered seventy, the former excelling in point of attack and in correctness of time and tune. The soloists were Miss Nellie Ellis, Messrs. W. Foster and H. Smith. The only other choral event was the performance of Dvorák's 'The spectre's bride' by the Guildhall Choir on November 30, with Miss Caroline Hatchard, Messrs. Harold Wilde and Charles Knowles as principals. The fine blend of tone of the choir, their musical quality, and the excellence of the inner parts, made the singing enjoyable. Mr. John Pardew led a large band which, in the miscellaneous part of the programme, played the 'Slow March' by Tchaikovsky.

On November 7 Miss Helen Sealy, a highly gifted violinist, played the Mendelssohn and Paganini Concertos, with the fine orchestral band of the Royal Garrison Artillery, conducted by Mr. R. G. Evans. The Three Towns Symphony Orchestra, formed last season, and conducted by Mr. H. Moreton, appeared before the public for the second time on November 21 with Mozart's Symphony No. 4, in C minor, this being the most successful number in the programme, which included German's 'Welsh' rhapsody and Tchaikovsky's Serenade for strings. Mr. H. R. V. Ball, deputy-conductor assisted. In the following week, on November 28, Dr. Weekes's private Orchestral Society gave the first of this season's subscription concerts. Two movements from Brahms's first Symphony were successfully performed, and a notable feature of the concert was the playing of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, Miss Florrie Smith giving a brilliant and artistic rendering of the solo part. A suite by MacDowell and the overture 'Leonora' No. 3 were included. Dr. Weekes and Mr. Walter Weekes conducted in turn. Two of Mr. Frank Winterbottom's symphony concerts have taken place. At the first, on November 12, Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony was given, and at the second the 'Eroica,' while a 'Scherzo d'après une ballade de Goethe,' 'L'Apprenti Sorcier,' by Dukas, was a novelty. The vocalist on each occasion was Madame Auria Dawkins, wife of the conductor.

An event of special interest took place in Plymouth on December 21, when the Mayoress (Lady Radford), on behalf of the members of the South-Western section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, presented Dr. Emilie B. Guard with the robes appertaining to the degree of Doctor of Music, Dublin. Dr. Guard is the first lady to obtain the high honour of this degree at Dublin University.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Haydn String Quartet bears the chief burden of the cause of chamber music in Torquay. It gave its first concert for the season on October 9, showing marked advance in its standard of performance. Haydn's Quartet in B flat (Op. 76) and Grieg's in G minor (Op. 27) were the chief numbers in the programme. The vocalist was Mr. Walter Belgrove. This is the only chamber concert to be recorded in the South-west for this season.

The Torquay Musical Association opened its fifteenth season at its thirtieth concert on November 27. The choir sang some part-songs, and the orchestra played two movements from Beethoven's Symphony in A. Both forces combined in an impressive rendering of Dvorák's 'Te Deum,' in which Mr. T. H. Webb obtained excellent results. Mrs. W. H. Mortimer, with the band, played Scharwenka's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, and the vocalists were Miss Ruth Morrison and Mr. Walter Williams.

Before the amalgamation of the Exeter Oratorio Society and the Western Counties' Choral Association, which has now definitely taken place, the former Society had in rehearsal 'Judas Maccabeus,' and this was eventually adopted for performance at the first concert under the new conditions on November 20, with Miss Emily Breare, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Albert Collings and Mr. R. E. Miles as principals, and Mr. A. J. James leading the band. It is rather too early yet to speak of the chances of success of the amalgamation.

Dr. D. J. Wood (Western Counties) Association) conducted the first part, and Dr. H. J. Edwards (Exeter Oratorio Society) the remainder. On December 5, Barnstaple Musical Society gave a concert in which the choir acquitted itself well, under the direction of Dr. H. J. Edwards, in various part-songs. Dr. Edwards played pianoforte solos, Miss Hilda Pugsley violin solos, and Mr. Percy Lewis violoncello solos, the three instrumentalists joining in a Beethoven trio. Miss Linford Brown sang. The young choral society at Tavistock justified its formation by the merit of its performance of the 'Banner of St. George' on December 11, conducted by the Rev. H. Leigh Murray, Miss May Groser singing the solo. Mr. Arthur J. Coombe led the band, and a miscellaneous programme was given. With true North Devon enthusiasm the Holsworthy Philharmonic Society progresses, in spite of peculiar hardships and difficulties, and on December 12 the season was marked by a performance of 'The ancient mariner,' with Mr. H. H. Bennett conducting and Miss Fleda Bowden,

The Musical Association at Devizes opened its nineteenth season on November 27 with a performance of 'St. Paul,' the principals being Miss Estella Linden, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. George F. Sands and Mr. Sydney Cole. The choir sang exceedingly well, and the band of local players was led by Mr. J. W. Duys, of Bath. Mr. Harry H. Baker conducted. At Taunton, on December 9, Mr. Reginald Ward obtained from the local choral society an excellent brahms's 'Song of Destiny' was also given, and solos were sung by Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. Charles Knowles; Mr. Max Heymann's orchestra from Bath assisted.

CORNWALL.

The Sevcik Orchestral Society, conducted by Miss B. Treweeke, at Falmouth, is now established on a permanent footing, and certainly deserves encouragement as the only instrumental combination in Cornwall. On November 28 an excellent programme was given, and solos were played by Mr. C. G. Pike (violoncello). The vocalists were Miss Ethel Beetlestone and Mr. J. C. Truscott.

The Camborne Choral Society performed Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis' and a miscellaneous programme on December 4, with Mrs. R. A. Thomas, Miss Maria Yelland, and Mr. A. E. Old as vocalists. Mr. H. V. Pearce conducted. On December 5, Redruth Musical Society, conducted by Mr. M. Clemens, performed 'Judas Maccabaeus' with Miss Moore, Miss Oliver, Mr. Maynard and Mr. S. J. Bishop The performance was enthusiastic and as principals. The baton of the Amalgamated Truro and Falmouth Philharmonic Societies is now held by Canon E. C. Corfe. Under his direction 'The Bride of Dunkerron' was performed at Falmouth on December 9 and at Truro on December 10, the choir being excellent in quality if a little uncertain in execution. The principals were Miss Mary Lund, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Walter Belgrove, Miss Mabel Hoskins leading the band.

The St. Columb Choral Society (conductor, Mr. J. H.

Pulman) gave a concert on December 11, when Mendels-sohn's Loreley' was the prominent feature of the programme.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

This has been a busy month in the music of Yorkshire. Apart from the 'Messiah' performances—which have been as thick as usual during the week before Christmas—there has been hardly a day without its concerts, sometimes as many as half-a-dozen in number.

LEEDS.

At Leeds the most important occurrence has been the Berlioz programme given at the Philharmonic and Subscription Concert of November 27. The great Requiem was, it may be remembered, performed by the Leeds Philharmonic Society last season, when it excited so much interest that it was wisely determined to repeat it before the impression had faded. With the aid of the Hallé Orchestra - augmented by the four little brass bands and the array of kettle-drums which the composer requires—a fine performance was given, on the whole more finished than on the former occasion, and one could realize that this exceptional orchestral force was employed not to make a noise, but for effects of colour not procurable in any other way. The remaining works given were the Symphonic Fantastique and the 'Benvenuto Cellini' overture, which received clear and married Cellini' overture, which received clear and musical interpretations under Sir C. V. Stanford's direction. On two consecutive days, December 4 and 5, Leeds had three chamber concerts of more than ordinary interest. On the former date the Parisian String Quartet-led by Mr. Willaume, with Mr. Vines as pianist, and Miss Luquiens as vocalistintroduced a selection of music illustrating the latest developments of the French School, the most important being Chausson's Pianoforte quartet in A, a work full of beautiful ideas, and masterly in workmanship, and the very individual

Miss Clara Rohson, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. S. J. Bishop and graceful String quartet of Debussy, each of which received a sympathetic and highly finished interpretation. In the evening of the same day the local Rasch Quartet introduced a String quartet in B minor by Schrattenholz, a musicianly but not very individual or profoundly interesting work, the effect of which was overshadowed by the F minor Pianoforte quintet of Brahms, in which Mr. Percy Richardson was the The following day there was a German incursion in the shape of a Weingartner concert, in which the great conductor took part as pianist in some of his own works, assisted by the Rebner Quartet from Frankfurt, and Mr. Claude Hobday in the Sextet in E minor, a highly interesting work, if not quite convincing of the composer's original genius. Miss Gertrude Lonsdale sang most admirably a number of the composer's songs.

On December 4 the 'German Requiem,' given at Leeds Parish Church under Dr. Bairstow's direction, produced an impression which was the more profound by reason of the surroundings. The Leeds Choral Union performed 'Elijah on December 11, with Madame Ella Russell, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Charles Knowles as principals. In so familiar a work the powerful chorus was heard to great advantage, and Dr. Coward gave a strongly-coloured interpretation of the music. The Leeds Municipal Orchestra, under Mr. Fricker, has been active, giving its fortnightly concerts to large audiences, who, for the sum of fortnightly concerts to large audiences, wno, for the sum of twopence and upwards, have been able to hear thoroughly efficient performances of Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, and the 'Finlandia' and 'Karelia' suites of Sibelius on November 23; the 'Pathetic' symphony and 'Romeo and Juliet' tone-poem of Tchaikovsky on December 7; and Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony on December 21. These bald facts indicate plainly enough what a great work these concerts are doing in popularizing the best type of music, and it is satisfactory to notice that they are appreciated by audiences of increasing size. On December 17 Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus appeared at one of the Leeds Musical Evenings, and on the same day the Leeds Symphony Society gave a concert, at which Mr. A. D. ducted a performance of the 'Unfinished' symphony that ducted a performance of the amateur orchestra. The Carl Rosa Society gave a concert, at which Mr. A. E. Grimshaw con-Company paid its annual visit to Leeds during the week beginning December 9, revivals of Verdi's 'Otello' and Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda' being the chief features. Recitals by three young and promising musicians can only be mentioned: Miss Maud Robinson, a pianist of ability, gave one on December 10; Miss Lilian Harris, a contralto, followed on December 12: and on December 14 Miss Pattie Hornsby, an artistic vocalist and thorough musician, gave a most interesting recital. On November 26 the Armley Choral Society, conducted by Mr. H. H. Pickard, gave an exceptionally interesting programme, including Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' and Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to music,' all of which were sung with excellent musical effect. The first visit to Leeds of Mr. Edouard de Reszke, and of that very clever child, Vivien Chartres, at the Harrison concert on December 16, deserves a pression wood of provices. deserves a passing word of notice.

BRADFORD.

On November 22, at the Subscription Concert, Dr. Richter gave an unusually interesting performance of the 'Eroica symphony, which will be remembered by the extraordinary clearness and finish of every detail. Lady Halle's appearance, to play Viotti's A minor Violin concerto, was another event which marked the occasion, and it was pleasant to find her playing with her accustomed finish and beauty of phrasing. At the next Subscription Concert, on December 13, Miss Agnes Nicholls and Sir Charles Santley were the vocalists, and Mischa Elman's artistic violin playing was a feature of interest. The Festival Choral Society's concert on December 6 was an event of special interest, since it was given with the co-operation of the Scottish Orchestra, and, as both organizations are under Dr. Cowen's direction, some exceedingly good performances, orchestral and choral, were the result. Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony received a really brilliant interpretation, while the chorus was heard in Richard Strauss's 'Wanderer's Sturmlied,' which was well done, though some of the detail was capable of greater finish. The programme of the Bradford l'ermanent Orchestra's concert on December 14 included three movements from Beethoven's first Symphony, and though it is to be regretted that the committee has not sufficient confidence in its audiences to venture upon an entire symphony, there is no doubt a wise discretion in its policy. And it manages to introduce much that is excellent: witness the 'Finlandia' tone-poem and 'Huldigungsmarsch,' which were most efficiently played under Mr. Allen Gill's conductorship at this concert. On December 2, Miss Edith Wehner and Mr. C. Henrich gave a very enjoyable concert of songs and pianoforte music, with, by way of an introduction, Beethoven's Violin sonata in D (Op. 12), in which Mr. Ellenberger was the violinist.

OTHER TOWNS.

At Hull the Symphony Orchestra has two more of its enjoyable matinees to be placed to its account. On December 5 Beethoven's eighth Symphony, with two examples of the Bohemian School—Smetana's 'Lustspiel' overture and Dvorák's 'Carneval' overture—were played with admirable go and force under Mr. Wallerstein, while another local musician, Mr. J. W. Hudson, conducted a pleasing but too brief 'Intermezzo' of his own. The pleasing but too brief 'Intermezzo' of his own. The programme on December 19 was entirely of Wagner pieces. The Hull Vocal Society, under Dr. G. H. Smith, gave 'Elijah' on November 25, with Miss Forest, Miss Peters, Mr. Brearley and Mr. Herbert Brown as principals, and with a generally successful result, though there were some traces of insufficient preparation. An orchestral concert was given by the Hull Philharmonic Society, under Mr. J. W. Hudson, on December 6, when readings very creditable to an amateur body were given of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony and the 'Fidelio' and 'In Memoriam' overtures. Miss Esta d'Argo was the vocalist.

The Scarborough Philharmonic Society offered a very interesting programme of orchestral and choral music on December 3. Beethoven's C minor symphony and the 'Tristan' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures were played with great Beethoven's C minor symphony and the brightness, and very finished performances were given of Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Stanford's 'The Revenge,' the latter being sung with admirable point. Mr. Albert Garcia was an interesting vocalist, and Dr. Ely conducted with exceptional ability.

At Huddersfield the Philharmonic Society gave what we might now style the 'inevitable' Wagner programme on November 30, the amateur orchestra playing the 'Rienzi' and 'Tannhauser' overtures, and a not very artistic selection from 'The Flying Dutchman,' very creditably. Mr. A. Pearson conducted, and the violin soles of Miss Marjorie Priestman were interesting. At the Subscription Concert on December 10, the highly artistic singing of Miss Agnes Nicholls and Miss Marie Brema, and the most refined and sensitive pianoforte playing of Miss Mathilde Verne, were the prominent features.

The Morley Choral Society performed Handel's 'Samson' on December 2, Miss Mary Swailes, Miss Appleyard, Messrs. Heather and Lycett being the soloists, while Mr. Fricker conducted. The vigorous chorus-singing was a noteworthy feature of the performance.

Brahms's 'German Requiem' was given in Ripon Cathedral on December 19, when Mr. Ellis, of Durham Cathedral, conducted, in the absence through illness of Mr. C. H. Moody, the Ripon organist.

On December 11, the York Musical Society, under Mr. T. Tertius Noble, gave a miscellaneous programme of part-songs and the like, from Gibbons to Elgar.

On December 12 the Doncaster Musical Society, of which Mr. Thomas Brameld is conductor, gave a miscellaneous concert, the programme of which included Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper,' which was sung with finish, while so marked an effect was produced in Hegar's difficult male-voice partsong, 'The phantom host,' that it had to be repeated.

The Harrogate Choral Society, under Mr. C. L. Naylor's direction, essayed Goring Thomas's beautiful cantata, 'The swan and the skylark,' on November 29, but with less than its usual success, since lack of preparation was evident. Mr. Webster Millar sang the tenor solos with excellent effect, and the other solo parts were efficiently taken by Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, and Mr. Fowler Burton.

AN INTERESTING HOLIDAY TASK.

Public schoolboys of a generation ago were sorely troubled—only at the end of the holidays!—by the nature of their 'holiday tasks.' The Headmaster of Eton, who admits that even 'at present they are only partly successful' (the italics are ours), proposes to make the 'tasks' less burdensome, as the following letter, addressed by him to the parents and guardians of Etonians, duly sheweth:

Dear Sir or Madam,-I wish to ask your co-operation in regard to holiday tasks.

At present they are only partly successful. The book set for reading is appreciated by boys who have literary instincts, and who are encouraged at home, but fails with many. What seems to be required is an option, in a subject unlike literature, which may appeal to some more general taste.

Such a subject is music. All boys (except about 2 per cent.) have a taste for music which is capable of development. Space forbids me to give proofs of this statement, but it may be admitted by all who realise that development does not mean increasing the number of third-rate performers, but swelling the number of those who can listen intelligently to good music, by giving them early in life an elementary knowledge of harmony and the bare technical rudiments.

The simplest way of doing this is to teach simple sight-reading in the ordinary notation. A little training if taken soon enough makes a very great difference to enjoyment later, not only as to listening to music but as to part-singing. There are many hundreds of educated Englishmen who would be glad to sing part-songs, but are prevented by inability to read the simplest music. Such training, then, is one way in which boys may be helped to do what most young men cannot do, viz., use their leisure time really well.

But there is no time for this at a public school. If done at all by any considerable number it must be done in the holidays. Therefore, if you think fit, your boy on his return home this Christmas can take a musical holiday task instead of a literary one.

The nature of the examination will be as follows:

First, a sight-reading test. Something extremely simple will be given, such as the air of a new hymntune, and for the better boys the alto part also. Also simple questions in counting time, and about keys and musical signs, &c., such as could be found in any musical primer. Lastly, the life of a celebrated composer. For the last item, Parry's 'Studies of Great Composers' (1 Vol., Routledge) will be required.

Manifestly everything will depend on the encouragement given at home. That encouragement will be forthcoming, I am sure, if it is realised how far-reaching the benefits to English life would be if a really considerable number of boys spent part of their holidays in laying the foundations of a rational enjoyment of good music. Appreciating good music generally means catching the under parts, not only listening to the air; and this is exactly what sight-reading gradually gives the power to do.

Nor need there be any difficulty about teaching it, if only the parents are willing to take the modicum of trouble without which all holiday tasks are really useless.

Any adult who chooses can master the elements and see that a boy on his holidays works at them. Especially any lady who plays and even one who does not, or the village schoolmaster or some friend might help; but generally no help would be required outside the family.

There has been such an increase of interest in music during the last twenty years that I have good hopes this appeal will not seem to be premature.

E. LYTTELTON.

Eton, December, 1907.

A large number of scholars attending London County Council schools are now receiving at Trinity College of Music (London) free instruction in sight-singing, ear-training, musical dictation, &c., in connection with the scheme for the training of teachers. Some of these students, after a year's attendance and after examination, are under instruction in pianoforte playing, &c.

AN ILLUMINATED SYMPHONY.

An entirely novel orchestral concert is announced to be given in Queen's Hall on Monday evening, January 20, when will be performed for the first time, and in darkness, 'an illuminated dramatic symphony with choral epilogue to be sung by 150 men's voices.' The subject of the symphony is a poem on heaven and hell,' entitled 'Apollo and the Seaman' written by Mr. Herbert Trench, while the music is by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke. The orchestra—to be conducted by Mr. Thomas Beecham—will, as far as possible, be invisible, but the words to which the symphony is written are to be clearly in sight of every person in the audience, and 'will change by electric rays as the music proceeds.' By this means it is hoped that the musical themes will gain in definiteness, force, and solemnity becombination with the poetry which suggests them. Mr. Holbrooke's music is laid out on extensive lines, as the orchestra consists of strings, piccolo, 3 flutes, 3 oboes, Corno inglese, 2 clarinets, clarinet in E flat, alto clarinet, 3 bassoons, contra fagotto, 4 (or 8) horns, 4 trumpets, 3 trombones, contra tuba, euphonium, 2 saxophones (ad lib.), 2 sarrasophones (ad lib.), 3 drums, big drum, side drum, cymbals, tambourines; bells, glockenspiel, gongs, tabor, 2 harps, celeste, and xylophone

The following ladies and gentlemen have signified their patronage of this musical event, which is sure to excite much interest: Lady Alastair Innes-Ker, Lady De Grey, Duchess of Portland, Duchess of Leeds, Duchess of Sutherland, Duchess of Marlborough, Adeline Duchess of Bedford, Lady Alington, Baroness De Meyer, Hon. Mrs. Alfred Lyttelton, Lady Lewis, Hon. Mrs. Rochefort Maguire, Lord Curzon

Jean Louis Nicode's 'Gloria' symphony was given here on December 12, under the composer's direction.

The great success achieved by Frau Sophie Heymann-Engel with her opera performances at the Hochschule, induced the management of the Mozart Hall to repeat on successive days the two old comic operas 'Die Magd als Herrin' ('La serva padrona') by Pergolesi and 'Der betrogene Kadi' ('Le Cadi dupé') by Gluck, and at popular prices. — The Heldentenor, Willi Merkel, of the Komische Oper, has been engaged by Herr Weingartner for Vienna, from the year 1910, when his contract expires here. --- Ilans Lortzing, the last surviving son of Albert Lortzing, recently died in the Augusta Hospital of this city. The youngest of eleven children, he was born in 1845 at Leipzig. A daughter of the composer, still living, Frau Lina Krafft-Lortzing, at Vienna, is eighty years old. — The post of director of the Hochschule für Musik, vacant through the death of Dr. Joachim, was offered to Eugen d'Albert, but he cannot accept it, as he wishes to devote most of his time to composition. ——Shakespeare's 'As you like it' will shortly be given at the Reinhardt Theatre, with incidental music by Humperdinck.—The next novelty at the Komische Oper will be Charpentier's 'Louise.' For the title rôle Director Gregor has engaged Henny Hinkenbach, who has successfully appeared in the opera elsewhere. - A Russian choir gave performances here last month at the Hochshule. The conductor, Alexander Andreewitsch Archangelsky, born in 1846, is the son of a poor village priest, and obtained his first instruction in music at the priests' seminary at Pensa, where finally he became conductor of the episcopal choir. In 1883 he and his Pensa Choir made a first appearance in St. Petersburg, and in a series of sacred songs and folk melodies obtained remarkable success.

HAMBURG.

Eugen d'Albert's new comic opera in four acts, entitled 'Tragaldabas,' was produced at the Municipal Theatre on December 3. The libretto, by Rudolf Lothar, is based on Vacquerie's comedy, 'Tragaldabas,' produced at the Porte 200 performers, and the principal vocalists we St. Martin, Paris, in 1848, with Frédéric Lemaître in the Lister, Mr. Ernest Pike and Mr. W. E. Soar.

title-rôle. The performance, an excellent one, was under the direction of Gustav Brecher. Herr von Scheidt impersonated the chief character, and Frau Hindermann his cousin Laura.

In 1910 is to be celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Pergolesi, the composer of 'Laserva padrona,' in this his native city. The sculptor Lazzari has furnished the design for a monument to be erected to his memory. Professor Radiciotti has already commenced his researches among Neapolitan archives with a view to writing a comprehensive monograph of the composer, to be published on the occasion of the celebration.

Herr Felix Mottl will probably take part in the conductorship of the Bavarian Musical Festival to be held here next May. The programme includes Beethoven's 'Missa solemnis' and Bruckner's second Symphony.

Messrs. Messager & Broussan will give a season of Russian opera next April, consisting of three performances a week; the company, decorations, costumes and the repertoy—indeed, everything—will be Russian. Three works have been selected. Of these the most important are 'Sadko,' by Rimsky-Korsakof, and 'Boris Goudounof,' by Mussorgski. --- The prize of the Ville de Paris for the musical competition of 1907-1908 will be £240, while £480 will be spent on the production of the successful work.

PRAGUE.

Professor v. Kaan has been appointed director of the Conservatorium. He formerly studied there, and became a professor of the pianoforte in 1890. He accompanied Dvorák when the latter came to London in 1884.

A three-act opera 'La nave rossa' (The red ship) was recently produced at the Lyric Theatre, with marked success. It is the maiden effort, as regards the stage, of a little-known composer, Armando Seppili by name.

ST. PETERSBURG.

M. Ossovsky, musical critic of the Slovo newspaper, has just published a 'History of Music in Russia.'

VIENNA.

The production of Goldmark's new opera, 'Das Wintermärchen,' founded, of course, on Shakespeare's 'Winter's Tale,' at the Court Opera, was announced to take place on December 30, under the direction of Capellmeister Watter, who formerly belonged to the Berlin Royal Opera.

WRIMAR.

For the inauguration of the new Court theatre, Herr Felix Weingartner has set to music a festival poem by Richard Voss. Goethe's 'Faust' will be given with the new music also composed by Herr Weingartner.

Mr. Cecil J. Sharp delivered two concert lectures on Folk-Song at the Tribune Rendezvous on December 18 The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone), who occupied the chair, in expressing his appreciation of the old songs so delightfully sung by Miss Kay, said that it was a great pleasure to hear Mr. Sharp speaking upon a subject of which he was so perfect a master. But he demurred somewhat to the lecturer's remarks upon there being no real English School of music. From the middle of the 15th century down to 1800 there was, he believed, a distinct School of English music specially represented by our madrigals. He hoped that that very pleasant gathering would be the means of spreading more widely Mr. Sharp's great knowledge of our folk-songs, which must assuredly conduce to the improvement of musical taste in England.

The South London Choral Association, ably conducted by Mr. L. C. Venables, gave on December 2 a highly successful performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' 'The death of Minnehaha,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse) numbered 200 performers, and the principal vocalists were Miss Ethel

Women's Work, which was opened on October 23 with the greatest success in the presence of the Governor-General and five Governors of the States. The feature that has attracted most attention is the huge women's choir of 1,350 voices, conducted by Mrs. Franklin Peterson, wife of the Ormond Professor of Music in the University of Melbourne. Another novelty is a brass band composed of thirty-five students of the University Conservatorium, who assist in the accompaniments to the choruses as well as sustaining programmes of

The Richmond New Philharmonic Society gave a concert at the Castle Theatre on December 11, when an interesting rogramme was performed, which included Schubert's 'Rosamunde' music, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding feast,' Elgar's 'Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands, and Grieg's 'Bergliot.' The choir and orchestra gave evidence of careful training under the able direction of Mr. James Brown, and the solo vocalists were Miss Lena Hurst and Mr. Wilfred Kearton, the recitation part in 'Bergliot' being very cleverly given by Miss Maud Lupton.

A new and original comic opera entitled 'Tarara,' or 'The Brigands' trust,' written and composed by Mr. R. T. Nicholson, of Loughton, was produced with much success in Lopping Hall, Loughton, on November 28, and repeated on the two following evenings. The opera, which is a work of great merit, was performed under the stage management of the author, and Mr. Henry Riding, musical director of the Operatic Society, conducted. The cast, scenery and dresses were excellent, and a word of praise is due to the orchestra for its valued co-operation.

The programme of the Richmond Philharmonic Society's concert which took place at the 'Star and Garter' Hotel on I)ecember 12, included Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis,' Handel's L'Allegro ed il Pensieroso,' Schumann's Symphony (No. 4) in D minor, and the symphonic poem 'Finlandia' by Sibelius. These works were excellently performed by the choir and orchestra of the Society under the able conductorship of Dr. Charles E. Jolley. The solo vocalists were Miss Julia Caroli, Mr. John Needham and Mr. Frederick Wheeler.

The Lewisham Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' at the Concert Hall, Blackheath, on December 11, under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Idle. The choir sang with much intelligence and crispness of attack, its expression in the unaccompanied chorus, 'As torrents in summer,' being especially noticeable. There was an orchestra of fifty performers, chiefly professional, and the solo vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Francis Harford.

The School orchestra gave admirable renderings of the entr'actes from Schubert's 'Rosamunde' and Sullivan's incidental music to 'Henry VIII.' Mr. W. S. Robinson conducted.

NORTHAMPTON.—An excellent performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' was given by the Musical Society on December 5. The solo vocalists were Miss Esta d'Argo (who replaced Miss Helen Jaxon at short notice), Mr. William Maxwell, Mr. Charles Knowles and Mr. Henry Sunman, a thoroughly able quartet. Mr. Charles J. King conducted. The cantata was preceded by Schumann's 'Manfred' overture.

The choir, which evinced most careful training and exhibited a high state of efficiency, contributed in no small degree to an enjoyable evening.

The prominent feature was the part-music, which included Mendelssohn's 'Vintage song,' 'Hunter's farewell,' 'Love and wine,' and 'Turkish drinking song,' and Elgar's 'After many a dusty mile' and 'It's oh, to be a wild wind.' These were sung by the choir with rare spirit and delicacy, the refinement displayed in the two Elgar part-songs being quite remarkable. The credit of this is undoubtedly due to Mr. Allen K. Blackall, a conductor of first-class ability.

Mr. Mann Dyson conducted and Mr. F. G. Hickson was an able accompanist.

Answers to Correspondents.

FUGUE.—(1) It would be invidious for us to 'arrange' the four degrees in music you mention 'in the order of their importance.' If you hold all the diplomas which the abbreviations express, you are well on the way to have all the letters of the alphabet after your name. (2) As to whether the pianist or the first violinist should be 'the leader in chamber music, is surely a matter that can be arranged, if there is any need for superiority. (3) The following are suggested metronomic speeds—Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata (Op. 10, No.1). First movement, dotted minim = 69; second movement, quaver = 69; last movement, minim = 100.

Brahms's 'Intermezzo' Op. 119, No. 1, quaver = 60;

No. 2, crotchet = 66, and 68 for the middle section. Gade's Novelletten Trio (Op. 29), first movement, dotted minim = 63; Andantino, quaver = 96; Moderato, minim = 88; Larghetto, dotted crotchet = 48; Finale, crotchet = 132.

- S. H. K.—(1) Abraham Jordan is usually credited with the invention of the swell organ. Mendelssohn certainly played on organs in London which had swell manuals.

 (2) Dr. S. S. Wesley's overture for orchestra was played at the Hereford Musical Festival of 1843, and also at one of the trial performances of the Philharmonic Society, London, on January 31, 1833, but it does not appear to have been heard of since that date.
- '. A.—The words of Sir Henry Bishop's song 'Should he upbraid' are founded upon the speech of Petruchio in 'The taming of the shrew,' Act ii., Scene I, beginning with 'I pray you do, I will attend her.' Only to this limited extent are the words by Shakespeare. The music of the song was composed by Bishop for performances of 'The two gentlemen of Verona' in 1821.

TREMOLANDO.-If the gentleman who heard you sing 'Annie Laurie' was deaf, and thought you—a young Scot, aged twenty—sang like an Italian, his opinion might not be very valuable as to your vocal capabilities. We cannot recommend teachers; but until you can afford to pay for some good lessons, why not join a church choir or choral society which is under a competent musician?

- E.—(1) We do not think that the Hope-Jones Organ Company now have an office in London; (2) Messrs. Hill & Son and Messrs. Gray & Davison were separate firms of organ-builders; (3) It is not possible to print satisfactory phonetic pronunciations of the three foreign names you have sent.
- A. C. H.—As Messrs. Briggs and Frere, who are very reliable authorities on the subject, in their 'Manual of Plain Song' do not 'change the ending, or make an entire change of tone and ending' for Psalm 78, you may be sure that no change is considered desirable.
- S. G. D.-You have the best of the argument in regard to the hymn 'For all the saints,' and you had better stick to your opinions. Your friend's method of altering the rhythm of Barnby's tune to the hymn is quite impracticable.
- J. G.—The value of your Mendelssohn letter would depend upon its condition and the nature of its contents. The fact that it was written during the last year of his life gives it a special interest.
- J. G. H.—The dates of death of the three gentlemen you name are as follows: John Braham, February 17, 1856; J. R. Planché, May 3, 1880; and N. Vert, June 3, 1905.
- R. D. L.—We are unable to pass an opinion on the system you name, but we have heard it favourably spoken of. 'A course of six lessons' might be worth a trial.
- G. B.—You had better submit your violin to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Son, 140, New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, will report reliably upon its value.
- E. M.—You will find Dr. H. J. Edwards's cantata 'The Epiphany' quite suited for church performance at the Feast of the Epiphany.
- A. W.—The Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes, the composer of hymn-tunes, died at St. Leonards-on-Sea, January 22, 1876.

G. F. HANDEL

EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls") and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

Price One Shilling. Words only, 10s. per 100.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success. —Sheffield Independent.

lated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lytic charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . .

"Thou art the King of Glory," a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."—Birmingham Daily Gasatte.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Pentypiool Free Press.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments,"—Birmingham Daily Mail.

EXTRACT FROM PREFATORY NOTE.

This book has been prepared in order to provide readers who wish to listen to music intelligently, yet without going into technicalities, with a simple and practical guide to musical appreciation written from the listener's rather than from the professional musician's standpoint.

The authors believe that there is at the present moment a genuine need for such a book.

An effort has been made, first, to present to the reader in clear and untechnical language an account of the evolution of musical art from the primitive folk-song up to the symphony of Beethoven; second, to illustrate all the steps of this evolution by carefully chosen musical examples, in the form of short quotations in the text and of complete pieces printed in a supplement; third, to facilitate the study of these examples by means of detailed analysis, measure by measure, in many cases put into the shape of tabular views; and fourth, to mark out the lines of further study by suggesting collateral reading.

It has been revised and, of course, re-scored, but the fact that it bears the Opus No. 1A may indicate that in general plan it is to be considered as really belonging to the composer's childhood. It is very easy to see a great many of the little devices by which the man has improved the boy's work; effective harp passages and points of imitation speak to every hearer of 1907 rather than of 1850, but the freshness of the main deas, the vivacity of contrast in the last movement between the fairies and the giants, and the pretty thought embodied in the section called "Fairy Pipers," breathe of a boyish imagination. . . The clever "Sun Dance" seems to have walked straight out of Tchaikovsky, and the "Giants" straight out of the "Rheingold"; the resemblance in the former case is no doubt due to the orchestration of the adult composer, but the latter must be another instance of independent invention by two but the latter must be another instance of independent invention by two composers.

STANDARD.

The suite begins with a short overture, and consists of six pieces. The remarkable point about them is that the melodic invention is wonderfully fresh and individual. They are, of course, slight, but in more than one place there is evidence of the skilled musician. Whatever additional effects have been secured by the matured hand and brain of the composer—whose skill in orchestration and colour is one of his chief qualities—the tunes themselves are full of charm and individuality. They show undoubtedly the promise that has been so amply fulfilled by the composer, but they also stand out as among the most fluent and spontaneous melodies that he has ever written.

MORNING POST.

The suite is entitled "The Wand of Youth," and is one of the most charming and graceful efforts imaginable. Dr. Elgar has apparently used only the thematic material of the suite in its early form: its present development and orchestral treatment are that of a master hand. The Elgar of 1869 and the Elgar of to-day harmonise well together. With the adoption of a sane simplicity in the subject-matter, and the same concentration of harmonic power upon such unassuming themes, a perfect style would be provided for the setting to music of a purely child's story like that of "Peter Pan.". . . . The "Sun Dance" and the "Slumber Scene" are particularly distinctive; the one by its rhythmic quaintness, the other by its peculiar appropriateness and the beauty of its orchestration. orchestration

DAILY NEWS.

The music of the suite is singularly original, with the exception of an avowed "Old Style" minuet and the Mendelssohnian scherzo manner of the "Sun Dance." The most taking of the six sections is the movement entitled "Fairy Pipers," which has a second subject of haunting beauty. A "Slumber Scene" also foreshadows the Elgar of the "Dorabella" variation in the "Enigma" set. The little suite represents a side of the composer which is not to be detected in his very latest compositions. It rather suggests that he should have long since written a light opera. "The Wand of Youth" may be warmly commended to the attention of conductors of amateur orchestras.

OBSERVER.

Leaving the orchestration—which is the result of the composer's matured powers—out of the question, these pleasing and graceful pieces show a melodic invention truly wonderful for a boy of twelve. . . . The "Serenade" and the "Slumber Scene" must be picked out as specially charming and wholly characteristic of the musician who wrote the delicate "Dorabella" variation. These two numbers foreshadow in remarkable way the gift for pure melody shown in the popular violin piece, "Salut d'Amour," which was one of the first compositions to bring Elgar into prominence.

TRIBUNE.

In Sir Edward Elgar's new suite "The Wand of Youth"—as far as structure and design are concerned, a work in miniature—childlike simplicity and charm march hand in hand with ingenious imagination and consummate knowledge of effect. . . This revised version of one of the composer's earliest works, showing at once the fancy of the boy and the mastery of the man, was excellently played and very well received.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a much more consistent work than one would have expected in the circumstances: some of the movements are full of grace and charm, and all are beautifully scored. The Overture is delightfully fresh and vigorous, and there is piquancy and originality in the "Sun Dance," especially in the orchestration of the latter part: while the final movement, "Giants and Fairies," has a great deal of fancy and fine swing. . The suite, as a whole, will be a welcome addition to the repertoire

SUNDAY TIMES.

The work has both the exhilaration and the gravity of childhood, and The work has both the exhitaration and the gravity of childhood, and the numbers make a charming sequence. Those one remembers most affectionately are the "Minuet," which shows the young Elgar already under the influence of Bach; the "Sun Dance," which might be the germ of one of the "Enigma" Variations, Nos. 3 or 4, so typical in their delicate remoteness of the later musician, and "Fairies and Giants" in its fine fantastic pomposity.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The seven short movements are very characteristic of the composer, especially in the fanciful orchestration, which is as happily done as anything of the kind from his pen.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

It is interesting to notice how early the characteristic Elgarian idiom seems to have manifested itself, some of the phrases and melodies of the suite being remarkably similar to those which we have long since become familiar with in the composer's later works—and also how little of it is in any marked degree suggestive of other composers or in any way derivative. Elgar was apparently himself from the beginning.

The "Serenade," the "Sun Dance," "Fairy Pipers," and the "Slumber Scene" are full of dainty fancies charmingly expressed, and the suite ought to become popular.

YORKSHIRE POST.

VORKSHIRE POST.

The themes possess a significance and, in several instances, a charm that, treated with Sir Edward's present resource, result in a most attractive work that will probably become very popular. It opens with a short and energetic Overture, built up with two well-contrasted themes of vivacious character. This prepares the way for an Andantino, a screenade of happy sentiment also possessing attractive melodies. The next number is a Minuet, written in "the olden style"; it is dainty, and charmingly suggestive of tenderness and courteousness. To this succeeds a "Sun Dance," which is replete with exuberant life. It has three subjects, the third of haunting melodiousness. In the next movement, the music becomes more tranquil. It is headed "Fairy Pipers," and there is written in the score, "Two fairy pipers pass in a boat, and charm them to sleep." . . The piece is delicately scored, but still more subtle effects are produced in the sixth number, a "Slumber Song," played almost entirely pianissimo, and of fascinating dreaminess. The Finale is headed, "Fairies and Giants," . . It begins lightly and softly with a rhythmic theme, which, after brief development, is succeeded by another subject equally gay and attractive. The giants motif is as didactic and heavy as those of the fairies are capricious and captivating, and dramatic interest is thus set up which is deftly handled by the composer until a brilliant Coda brings the suite to an effective conclusion. conclusion.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The pleasing melodies, the freshness and ingenuity of the treatment-and the many happy thoughts in the scoring will commend it to music, lovers. . . . The breezy and melodious overture, the original, impetuous "Sun Dance," the charming "Serenade," and the fanciful and vigorous finale ("Giants and Fairies") are quite worthy of their author, and show that a great composer can make light music valuable. The suite was received very enthusias ically.

THE TIMES.

THE TIMES.

That Sir Hubert Parry would come triumphantly through the various difficulties of so congenial a task was only to be expected: but even his most ardent admirers can hardly have expected to find such richness, spontaneity, and genius of invention, or so much interest in the disposal and treatment of the vocal and instrumental forces. The piece is not scored with that love of strange effects that we know so well in modern days, and the orchestration is even dull here and there; but the far higher points of thematic invention and development are here shown in perfection. . . . The chorus, "To us is the glory of beauty revealed," is one of those great joyful choral utterances of which the composer has the secret, and the imperial chorus that follows it is in strong and admirable contrast. . . . The soprano, after the decline of Rome has been referred to in a lovely chorus, has an exquisite meditative solo, "So near to perfect joy and peace," which leads into the ferocious priestly utterance, set to a familiar "intonation" of ecclesiastical music, developed into an extraordinarily effective little movement. The male chorus sing this and the disputing "This is mine! Out on thee!" which is appropriately treated in close imitation. From the Dreamer's perception of the wakening of the "certainties" until the end we have a noble series of choral and solo passages, which find a grand climax in the splendid theme, "We praise the men of the days long gone," which is in all ways worthy of Parry at his very best. . . . At the end the applause was loud and long, for the impression made by the beautiful composition was quite extraordinary.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The text it is which first arrests attention, not by anything special in the making of its irregular unrhymed verse, but by the force and vigour of its language, the propriety, without mistiness or extravagance, of its expression, and the bold manner in which great social issues are introduced as proper themes for musical treatment. Here, as it seems to me, the composer has entered upon a course untrodden alike by forerunners and contemporaries. . . I can pay the music the highest compliment in my power by saying, as I now do with all absolute sincerity, that, following closely the course of the work with almost absorption in its great argument, I was not once conscious of any break in the absolute unity which should exist between words and music. It struck me as a case of the poet-musician whose double task is yet but one. Sir Hubert, as far as I could discern, never fell below the height of his lofty theme. Grave and dignified, solemn, when the great tragedy of humanity passed before us, glowing amid anticipations of better days, and triumphant in the faith of ultimate deliverance, the "Vision of Life" seemed as complete on its musical as on its poetic side, and it is a great work altogether, by the first production of which this festival has secured a claim upon the recollection.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

In this work the principal of the Royal College of Music comes before the public in the dual capacity of composer and poet, for he has written the poem that he has set to such impressive strains. The theme he has selected—that of the ceaseless march of humanity—is treated in a philosophical style in verses which are cleverly fashioned and neatly turned, and lead the casual reader to ponder over their sublime suggestiveness. . . The music throughout possesses a fascinating attractiveness, and an interest which grips the attention of the earnest listener. Fine, bold, melodic phrases, picturesque and skilful orchestration, and robust and effective choruses form the backbone of this majestic composition, in which, by the way, there is not a single dull passage. composition, in which, by the way, there is not a single dull passage.

"The Vision of Life" is a masterpiece, and as such it was regarded by this evening's audience, who at the close most enthusiastically congratulated the popular composer.

MORNING POST.

The extraordinary mastery and command of resource which Sir Hubert Parry has displayed so often have not deserted him, and the present work is well worthy of ranking by the side of many of his other compositions of similar character. . . . The work, which is a splendid example of contrapuntal writing, contains many passages of lofty inspiration, among which may be singled out the solo for the Spirit of the Vision, "So near to perfect joy and peace."

TRIBUNE.

Sir Hubert Parry's "The Vision of Life" proved to be so magnificent a poem in music, so splendid in beauty, strength, and stateliness, that I should not be surprised were it hereafter to be accounted the masterpiece among the many noble works to which the genius of our foremost British composer has given birth. Sir Hubert is the author of the words for which he has found this wonderfully expressive music, and his libretto, sombre and difficult as it may seem on first acquaintance, rises in several places to a high degree of eloquence. . . The music seems to have been generated in the composer's heart and head simultaneously with the poetry to which it is wedded. It is quite different in kind from the music by which a composer tries to illustrate the thought of another. If when reading Sir Hubert's poem some of it seemed obscure, all difficulty vanished when the hard places were explained by the music. Such music is more than merely illustrative—it is illuminating; and it is this characteristic of "The Vision of Life" which seems to me to make it worthy of the superlative epithets which I have used. . . . It was finely sung, and the reward given to the composer by the delighted choir and the audience at its conclusion was a scene of enthusiasm such as festival halls have rarely known. as festival halls have rarely known.

MORNING LEADER.

MORNING LEADER.

The reception of the work was wildly enthusiastic, and, indeed, applause frequently interrupted its course. . . . The modern spirit which pervades the whole is very remarkable, the scoring in particular—with an occasional richness of colouring—is surprising to those who know Parry's work best. The chief strength of this work is, of course, in the choric writing, and this, too, may be described as wholly modern in feeling. The strength of the part beginning "To us is the glory of beauty revealed," the dramatic force and picturesque power of those describing the rule of Pride and the madness of Greed respectively are highly effective; while Parry nearly approaches the massive grandeur of the "Blest Pair of Sirens" in the chorus, "Hearken, O Brother, to the music of the song of the world."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The idea is a fine one and eminently suitable for that peculiarly reflective style of musical composition which is one of Sir Hubert Parry's strong points. The text has been written by the composer, and is full of finely expressed phrases in a very free rhythm of language, which naturally makes for a corresponding freedom in the musical setting... To this text Sir Hubert Parry has written some very fine music. The choruses especially are remarkable for their variety, freedom of treatment, and breadth of expression. . . The work may be accepted, in fact, as one of the most powerful that have yet come from the composer's pen. A point worth mentioning is the splendid way in which the music grows in intensity of feeling as the idea of the text is developed.

ATHENÆUM.

To single out this or that number for praise would spoil the impression which we wish to give, viz., that the music as a whole reflects and intensifies the spirit of the words; the solo portions, however, particularly struck us by their freshness and romantic feeling.

HE GIVETH HIS BELOVED SLEEP

CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE POEM WRITTEN BY

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.
Full Score and Wind parts, MS.; String parts, 2s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

The composer has exactly caught the quiet meditative style of the poet, and has written a work of great sincerity and beauty. His occasional departures from the fairy realm where he has reigned so long and so happily have seldom been so completely successful as on this occasion; the theme of the refrain is so cleverly worked that the reiteration is never once felt to be redundant.

TELEGRAPH.

The most touching and effective points of the little work are those in which the composer by varied treatment of his main theme, by impressive and often very beautiful barmonic changes, and by varying forms of accompaniment avoids monotony. The piece, as a whole, is one for feeling rather than analysis, and the feeling in it is strong, music and words being quite in accord. That the hymn, for so it might in a popular sense be called, will enjoy extensive favour seems more than likely.

STANDARD.

Dr. Cowen's thoroughly lyrical and poetical setting of Mrs. Browning's lines "He giveth His beloved sleep" stands out as thoroughly characteristic. Interpreted with consummate art by Madame Kirkby Lunn, its quiet, tasteful expression formed at least a welcome change to the storm and strife of the greater part of modern music, whether native or alien. The solo part is frankly a song, and as music it is an achievement simply because it keeps to one definite idea of vocal expression. Suitable variety is brought about by use of the chorus as a species of accompaniment, while modernity is satisfied by the cleverly constructed but invariably clear orchestral background, in which the "leading tune" process is quite legitimately employed. Simple and spontaneous, Dr. Cowen's straightforward work found ample favour.

MORNING POST.

The spirit of the poem has been most felicitously caught by the composer, whose work may be described as a veritable gem. Beautiful in its simplicity and inexpressibly touching, music such as this goes straight to the heart. No striving after effect mars its appeal. One welcomes with delight a work of such pure beauty, so tender and melodious.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

This work admirably reflects the spirit of the verses. Throughout it is dreamy, peaceful, delicate, and fanciful, and its melodies are haunting, as might be expected from a man who so many years ago won fame as a song composer. Specially pleasing is Dr. Cowen's treatment of the Psalmist's words, "He giveth His beloved sleep," which provided the title to his cantata, this refrain being singularly effective and felicitous. Dr. Cowen seldom writes difficult music, and hence the immense popularity of his compositions, large and small, with the numerous choral societies spread all over the kingdom. This latest production consequently is assured of similar success, and deservedly so.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a very melodious and grateful piece of vocal writing, and reflects the tender, devotional spirit of the poem very imaginatively. In the passages beginning "Sleep soft, beloved, we sometimes say," and "His dews drop mutely," there are particularly happy touches.

Dr. Cowen has here achieved the difficult task of being thoroughly simple without being commonplace. The delicate music, full of feeling, exactly reflects the spirit of the words.

exactly reflects the spirit of the words.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Cowen's setting of "He giveth His beloved sleep," though not one of his most pretentious efforts, may assuredly be reckoned among his most charming works. The reason of its charm lies entirely in its simple sincerity. The tender spirit of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's poem, regretful, yet not with the sorrow of those who have no hope, is admirably caught. There is no sense of any striving for mere effectiveness, but the effects are secured by the simple directness with which the suggestions of the poem are translated into music. . . Certainly it may be doubted if he has ever gone so deeply into the emotional possibilities of a poem as he has in this case, and I think this composition must for that reason rank very high among his works. The close is really touching in its quiet expressiveness.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The composer would be expected, as a matter of course, to match with his art the pathos of Mrs. Browning's lines. That he has succeeded in doing so is a matter for sincere congratulation. The new cantata—or poem, as it is called by its composer—was well given and well received.

BARITONE SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Full Score and Wind parts, MS.; String parts, 6s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

It is broad and manly music, the pattern of which is fairly familiar by this time, but it is by no means conventional or wanting in originality. It made a good impression, and is sure to be in great request with competent choral societies.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Dr. Brewer has now given it all the advantage of modern resources, and lifted it into a higher sphere. It thus makes a capital piece for choral societies, and, I expect, will run at equal pace with Stanford's "Revenge," the prototype of its order.

STANDARD.

This fine old specimen of a folk-tale is treated by the composer in decidedly dramatic fashion, and his music, just sufficiently Scottish to be characteristic of the place and period, is sincere and spontaneous. Without being too heavily scored, the orchestral part is full of colour, and the chorus have some vivacious and sonorous passages, to which they gave most spirited effect.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Herbert Brewer's setting of the old Scotch ballad is a work of sterling merit. The music is virile and straightforward in character. The composer has something to say, and knows how to express his thoughts clearly and forcibly. His work possesses real interest. It is admirably written, and the success it achieved was fully justified.

The other novelty of the evening was "Sir Patrick Spens," by Dr. Brewer, the accomplished organist of Gloucester Cathedral. This is admirable in its power of vivid descriptive writing. Dr. Brewer tells the tale with wholesome directness, and he may justly be congratulated on his successful treatment of the old song.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

In the evening, the second new cantata, Dr. Herbert Brewer's setting of the Scottish poem, "Sir Patrick Spens," received a cordial welcome. The story of the gallant mariner, "the best sailor that ever sailed the sea," who was sent to Norway to bring home a Royal lady, and whose ill-fated vessel foundered forty miles off Aberdeen, naturally lends itself to stirring descriptive music, and it must be acknowledged that Dr. Brewer has been very successful in catching the spirit of the old poem. There is a go and brightness, a snap about his music which is certain to be appreciated by that large public that enjoys cantatas.

DAILY MAIL.

This is a genuinely inspired piece of work, full of keenly humorous

MORNING LEADER.

It is very sound, healthy music, that goes with a swing from start to finish. It has a very subtle fancy, but is not devoid of picturesqueness and, above all, it shows a good knowledge of the chorus, and choral societies should welcome it.

OBSERVER.

OBSERVER.

Dr. Herbert Brewer's "Sir Patrick Spens," a choral ballad of a natural and dramatic kind, contains some of the strongest and most individual music of this composer. It has the merit of being short and direct, and the choir sang it with delightful freshness and spirit. Although slight in form, it has a certain spontaneity and feeling for choral writing that will, in all probability keep it alive.

ATHENÆUM.

Dr. Brewer's setting of the old ballad of "Sir Patrick Spens" contains good workmanship, and is effectively written for the voices.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The composer has been very successful in telling the story clearly, and he has managed to give something of the simple ballad quality to his melodies, and to fit them into a picture-sque and appropriate background. Local colour is not forgotten, and the storm that wrecks Sir Patrick's ship received a vigorous, but not unmusical, commentary. Altogether it is a work which, without revealing any marked individuality, is exceedingly effective and of well-sustained interest, showing a very considerable descriptive power, and in vigour it may be said to go farther than any of his previous works. his previous works.

PRICE, Two SHILLINGS RACH, NET.
The Chorus Part separately, complete, 6d.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 5s.

THE TIMES.

The second part began with a set of four "pastorals" by Dr. A. H. Brewer, set for tenor solo, male chorus, and orchestra. Milton's "Song on May Morning" is the first, and "Orpheus with his lute" the third, while the others may be taken from some book of madrigals. The second, with its merry refrain, "Fa la la," carries a suggestion of the grace of the Elizabethan period, and all are excellently effective and full of original ideas happily carried out. . . The composer has done nothing better than these pastorals, and he well deserved the applause that greeted each as he conducted it.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

These, as laid out for tenor and orchestra, were generally successful, and specially so in measure of the simplicity which is their natural atmosphere.... In "Welcome, sweet Pleasure" the composer does not forget to show his musicianship; the effect of the piece is wholly in accord with the joyous spirit, all sport and play, which animates the words. This was sympathetically applauded.... "Springtime," last of the four songs, is, as it should be with such a theme, the most delicate and beautiful of all. As far as I can judge, there is not a flaw in it, while the orchestral theme which runs almost through the piece is a veritable inspiration. The composer, blemishes notwithstanding, is to be congratulated upon his "Pastorals."

STANDARD.

Beginning with Milton's "Song on May Morning," Dr. Brewer includes a new setting of Shakespeare's "Orpheus with his lute," and continues with two graceful little poems in the nature of madrigals. Melodious, thoroughly well scored, and with a nice feeling for vocal expression, they are a very pleasing example of tasteful, light music, and the composer is to be praised for his directness and simplicity. The last one of the set, a delightfully rhythmical and pleasing shepherds' dance, will, in all probability, be found the most immediately popular, but all of them show polished workmanship.

DAILY NEWS.

The brightness and animation of the music will be sure to win for the songs considerable popularity.

MORNING POST.

MORNING POST.

In a measure they form a sequence to the previous compositions with the same generic title which were first heard at the Hereford meeting last year, save that in this instance an added chorus for male voices increases the effect. One set of verses is taken from Shakspeare, another from Milton, while the other two are anonymous. In these new compositions Dr. Brewer shows the same happy faculty for catching the spirit of the verse and giving expression to it in terms both charming and fresh, displaying in the process individuality and marked originality. . . . The new pieces greatly charmed the audience.

TRIBUNE.

The second and fourth are bright and have a good deal of character. They are also effectively orchestrated.

DAILY GRAPHIC.
They are graceful and tender settings of four Elizabethan poems, fresh in melody and prettily orchestrated.

MORNING LEADER.

The first is Milton's "Song on May Morning," in which the chorus has but little to do: it is picturesquely scored; and the second, "Welcome, sweet Pleasure," has a catchy, characteristically English melody with a "Fa la la" refrain, and is merry and bustling. A melodious pastoral setting of "Orpheus with his lute" comes next, and "Hark, Jolly Shepherds" completes the set. They all go their way pleasantly.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

They are settings of words of Milton, Shakspeare, and anonymous writers for tenor solo and male-voice chorus, and are good examples of the composer's ready gift for expressing himself clearly and well.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

THE VORKSHIRE POST.

Sequels are admittedly venturesome, but Dr. Brewer has certainly managed to keep up the interest and sustain the freshness which so pleased one in the earlier work. . . Though the composer has employed a large orchestra, he has treated it with a lightness of touch that prevents it from ever going outside the picture, yet it is full of deft touches that give it piquancy. The first is a quiet, rather gentle exordium to the series, the second is lively and playful, the third, a setting of the well-known words, "Orpheus with his lute," alternates happily between playfulness and a tender emotion, and the fourth is jollity itself. The men's chorus supplies an effective refrain. . . . Dr. Brewer conducted, and the sonus gave evident pleasure to the audience. and the songs gave evident pleasure to the audience.

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 OUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

ERNEST A. DICKS, Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durbam, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation. commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A. M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

PREFACE.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpose presenting themselves for examination in the theory of music. While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time. the student's attention to one point at a time.

MUSIC AND MUSCLES.

The difference between the arm and hand of the "born" pianist and that of the average player is not that many muscles are strong, but that no muscle is very weak. Housework makes strong arms, but it does not help one at the keyboard. The small, weak muscles in every arm cause the technical troubles of the pianist, and piano practice only tires them without perfecting them. The Macdonald Smith System strengthens these little muscles directly, and does so in a remarkable way, so that perfect independent control, not only strength, is obtained. What this means to the pianist is described by pupils in "Light on Pianoforte Playing," which will be sent free on application to Mr. M. Macdonald Smith, inventor of the "Brain to Keyboard" System, 19, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL (BARITONE)

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

"ELIJAH." Dublin, November 20, 1907.

"The way to read a part was shown by Mr. Montague Borwell, the baritone. He varied his tone and methods admirably; the many fine points he exhibited without intruding are far too numerons to detail. The most notable was the degree of derision he conveyed in the phrase "Call him louder"—as fine a vocal touch as it is possible to obtain. Two other very striking bits of declamation were the passages beginning "I never troubled Israel's pence" and "O Thou Who madest Thine angels spirits." Then what a picture he called up by the way he sang the one word "Jezebel."

Mr. Borwell was encored for "It is enough," but his singing was on the same high level throughout, and was a remarkably illuminating study of the part."—Dublin Mail, November 21, 1907.

MR. ROBERT CARR (BARITONE).

"IN A PERSIAN GARDEN" (BROMLEY CHORAL SOCIETY).

"The baritone soloist, Mr. Robert Carr, was wonderfully artistic. In fact, the biggest success in the song-cycle was scored by him in the solo "Myself when young. Herein he showed the exquisite tenderness and fervid fire of his singing, and sang withal with such purity of tone that his hearers would have been soulless indeed had they not called him back."—The Bromley and District Times, December, 1907.

CLAUDE DEBUSSY.

The Musical Cimes.

FEBRUARY 1, 1908.

CLAUDE DEBUSSY.

Claude Achille Debussy was born at St. Germainen-Laye, near Paris, on August 22, 1862. pupil of the Paris Conservatoire he studied the pianoforte with Marmontel, harmony with Lavignac, counterpoint and composition under Massenet and Guiraud. He obtained prizes in all those courses, and in 1884 was awarded the 'Prix de Rome' for his cantata 'L'Enfant At that time he had composed a few songs and a 'Petite Suite' for pianoforte duet. The works that according to the regulations he sent from Rome to the Paris 'Institut,' were an orchestral suite with pianoforte and incidental chorus, 'Le Printemps,' and a setting for soprano solo and female chorus of the French translation of Rossetti's 'Blessed Damozel.' Both works were judged 'erratic and infected with modernism': accordingly they were refused the customary public performance, thus sharing a similar fate to that of Berlioz's 'Mort de Cléopâtre.'

A certain number of compositions in which the composer showed more freely his independent and daring spirit soon afterwards appeared—the six 'Ariettes oubliées' and 'Fêtes Galantes,' to words by Paul Verlaine, five poems of Charles Baudelaire, and sundry other songs. Little attention, however, seems to have been drawn to Debussy until 1893, when the Société Nationale de Musique gave the first performance of 'La Damoiselle Élue.' The same year Ysaye and his colleagues of the Ysaye Quartet, to whom it is dedicated, played the String quartet in G minor (Op. 10), which remains even now one of Debussy's best works. To that period belongs the 'Prélude à l'après-midi d'un Faune,' an orchestral piece bearing the unmistakable stamp of the composer's personality, and offering typical examples of the bold harmonies, delicate melodic curves, and manifold colour-effects that distinguish his style. Its first performance took place at the Concert of the Société Nationale of December 23, 1894; the second at the Concerts Colonne in the following October.* The work, suggested by the eclogue of Stéphane Mallarmé, on the whole was not unfavourably received: in fact some critics commended it highly, though perhaps more as a pleasant freak of fantasy than as a work opening untrodden paths; and none of them seem immediately to have realized its whole import.

Several years elapsed before Debussy was acknowledged as the promoter of an entirely new method which might be approved or not, but whose significance remained undeniable. Among the works that followed should be named the not unattractive though somewhat nebulous and strange 'Proses lyriques' (1894) — a sacrifice to the symbolic current of the moment; the 'Chansons de Bilitis' (1898), which deserve to be numbered among the most beautiful of French songs; and the three 'Nocturnes for Orchestra' (1899), in which Debussy displays a sense of harmonic and orchestral colour finer even than in the 'Prélude à l'après-midi d'un Faune.'

One may aver that, notwithstanding this activity, Debussy attracted very little public attention until the year 1902, when his lyric drama 'Pelléas et Mélisande' was produced at the Paris Opéra-Comique on April 30, 1902. Two causes can be found for this indifference. The revival of a genuine interest in symphonic and chamber music is comparatively recent in France, and, generally speaking, one can hardly be astonished that the seriousness and import of Debussy's original innovations should at first have escaped recognition, or aroused less sympathy than astonishment. Are not such cases common in the history of art?

But the performance of 'Pelléas et Mélisande' could hardly be ignored. A première at the national Opéra-Comique is always an important event; it attracts the public, and is commented upon in all Parisian newspapers, a favour sparingly accorded to concert novelties. Despite many sarcastic criticisms and wholesale depreciations, despite the not unaccountable bewilderment of the public at the first performance, success was not long in coming. Many musicians who at first stood aside feeling perplexed have now admitted the beauty of Debussy's lyric drama.

Debussy's first compositions for the pianoforte are but moderately original, except a delightful 'Marche Ecossaise' (on the Earl of Ross's march) in the form of a duet. But since 1901 he has written many beautiful pieces for the instrument: firstly, 'Pour le piano' (Prélude, Sarabande, Toccata); then 'Masques,' 'L'isle joyeuse,' 'Estampes' (Pagodes, La Soirèe dans Grenade, Jardins sous la pluie); and 'Images' (Book I.: Reflets dans l'Eau, Hommage à Rameau, Mouvement; Book II.: Cloches à travers les feuilles, Et la lune descend sur le temple que fut, Poissons d'or). He has now finished some incidental music to Shakespeare's 'King Lear,' and is beginning to write a second musical drama on a book by Gabriel Mourey, after the French form of the legend of Tristan and Isolde.

Debussy has also contributed articles on music to the Revue Blanche (1901) and the Gil Blas. They afford valuable indications as to his ideals in art, and should certainly be read by all who wish to gain a clear insight into his music. According to Debussy, the art of music should remain free from intellectual strain as well as from merely formal rhetoric: it should be contented with suggesting emotions in the simplest, most straightforward way. 'Music,' he says, 'is a sum of widespread forces: why turn it into a speculative song? I prefer the few notes from an Egyptian shepherd's flute. and hears harmonies that your treatises overlook. printing-press: Musicians will listen only to music written by clever hands, never to the music contained in Nature.' Again, 'People have enshrined Beethoven's ninth Symphony in a mist of words and of ponderous epithets. But Beethoven's mind was the reverse of literary: a small book containing over two hundred different renderings of the last movement's principal theme proves that a purely musical intention guided him. Therefore, no fixed rule should guide the creative artist: rules are established by works of art, and not for works of art.

'One should seek discipline in freedom, not in the precepts of a philosophy in its decline, and that is good only for those who are weak. I write music only in order to serve Music as best I can, and without any other intention: it is natural that my works should incur the risk of displeasing people who like "certain" music and perseveringly stick to it alone.'

According to the views expressed in Debussy's other articles, the principle of symphonic development should be excluded from the musical drama as out of keeping with the uninterrupted movement and progression that befit the action. The music must not comment upon the drama, but become part of it, the atmosphere through which dramatic emotion radiates. Moreover, all vocal parts should be written in strict accordance with the natural rhythm and accent of the words: thus only can true expression and suitable melody be invented.

In all the works of his maturity, Debussy has strictly adhered to these principles, and the leading characteristics of his art could not be summed up better than in the above extracts from his essays.

No one should attempt to pass final judgment on compositions that have yet to undergo the test of time. But let us not forget that many great artists have been ignored, sometimes even during the greater part of their lifetime; and moreover that all the men of genius whom posterity admires were free creators, and not slaves of pre-established rules.

In considering musical publications printed in foreign countries, a commencement may be made with the 'Theoricum opus armonice discipline' of Gafurius, a quarto volume printed at Naples in 1480. The British Museum not only possesses a copy of this 15th century treatise, but all the works of this pedantic priest, except the 1496 edition of the 'Angelicum ac divinum Opus Musice,' of which the only known copy is in the Musée Calvet at Avignon. The Museum copy of the Izaac Masses formerly belonged to King Henry VIII. The above list shows that the Museum possesses a Petrucci volume not enumerated in the catalogue of the works in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (new edn., vol. iii., p. 695). The list there given omits the 1514 reprint of Josquin's Lib. III., and does not credit the British Museum with possessing it or the Agricola Masses. facsimile given on the opposite page fully testifies to the perfectness of Petrucci's method. It is from one of the earliest books printed by the famous typographer—a Mass composed by Pierre de la Rue, also known as Pierchon, Pierson, Pierzon, and Petrus Platensis. Pierre de la Rue was a fellow pupil of Josquin des Près in the school of Okeghem, and a contrapuntist of almost equal skill to that famous composer. The Museum also possesses a copy of the 'Motteti De passione De cruce De sacramento De beata virgine et huius modi,' printed at Venice in the same year as the Mass (the motets were finished printing May 10, and the De la Rue Masses, October 31, 1503). This treasure is an exceedingly fine specimen of Petrucci's handiwork, printing and paper affording delight to the eye and touch. The precious tome is in its original binding, wood sides and leather back; moreover, it is peculiar in that all the parts of which the music consists are printed on opposite pages, instead of, as was usually done, in separate part-books. The fortunate acquisition, in 1894, of this rare volume—the sixth printed by the famous Venetian typographer—placed the British Museum collection of Petruccis on a par with the Vienna, Berlin, and Munich libraries.

Erhart Oeglin, the music-printer of Reutlingen, is represented by the 'Melopoiæ sive Harmoniæ Tetracenticæ' of Tritonius, a musical setting of some odes of Horace, printed at Augsburg in 1507. This folio book—the ink of which is very blackhas a fine illustrated title-page of Apollo surrounded by appropriate accessories. The 'Libro de Musica Pratica' of Francisco Tovar, a Spanish musician, is a work (printed at Barcelona in 1510) in which the staves only are printed, the notes being written in by hand. At Venice, in 1523, was printed the be ashamed of in its Petrucci possessions, especially earliest collection of organ or virginal music in when the rarity of these books is taken into account. | modern notation: this volume contains Recerchari, Motteti and Canzoni composed by Marco Antonio de Bologna, and printed on two staves of six lines each. At Lyons was printed, between 1539 and 1541, a collection of vocal part-music entitled:

Le Parangon des Chansons. Contenant plusieurs nouvelles & delectables Chansons que oncques ne furent imprimees au singulier prouffit & delectation des Musiciens. [Oblong quarto.]

Apart from their interest as early specimens of French music-typography, these volumes are so printed that they can be sung from by singers seated at a table, the superius and bassus parts being on one side, and the altus and tenor on the The earliest music other side of the book. printed in America is of the year 1556, and is contained in a volume (printed in Mexico) entitled 'Ordinarium sacri ordinis heremitarum Sancti Augustini, of which the Museum possesses a copy. A Amsterledam M. DC. 1111. [Obl. 40.]

Mexico must again be mentioned in another early work, printed in America and in its original vellum binding, the 'Liber in quo Quatuor Passiones Christi Domini' (1604) of Juan Navarro, a little-known Spanish composer. This folio volume contains a plain-chant setting of the music for Holy-week. The music consists of black square notes printed on red lines; the title-page unfortunately is mutilated, its centre portion, doubtless an illustration, having been cut out. Rare, indeed, are the works of Jan Sweelinck, the greatest of Dutch organists (1562-1621). national collection contains, however, the first three books of his 'Pseaumes de David,' of which the earliest is entitled:

CINQUANTE PSEAUMES DE DAVID, mis en Musique à 5, 6, & 7 parties, par IAN SWELINCK.

FACSIMILE OF A SPECIMEN OF PETRUCCI'S MUSIC-PRINTING; FROM THE MASS BY PIERRE DE LA RUE, VENICE, 1503.

One of Bach's predecessors in the organistship of | St. Thomas's Church, Leipzig, was Elias Nikolaus Amerbach. A copy of his 'Orgel oder Instrument Tablatur' (obl. 40), printed at Leipzig in 1571, has a twofold interest. It contains directions for the fingering of instruments, explanations of ornaments, &c. At the back of the title-page is an illustration which is reproduced on p. 85. The picture speaks for itself, but it will be observed that the conductor of the orchestra is using a baton of lengthy dimensions, and that copies of the music seem scarce. This volume presumably contains the signature of J. S. Bach, but it is of doubtful authenticity.

In the article 'Sweelinck' in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' it is stated that 'for a generation Sweelinck was the glory of Amsterdam. When he played the organ there was a wonderful concourse every day, every one was proud to have known, seen, and heard the man. And when he died it was the greatest of Dutch poets, Vondel, who wrote his epitaph and surnamed him "Phœnix of Music." His Psalms-four to eight voicesmake an interesting link between the tranquillity of the old polyphonists and the rhythm of modern music. Formally they stand nearest to the earlier style, but the strictness of their counterpoint, the abundance of imitation and fugue in them, does not hinder a general freedom of effect, very fine and full of melody, to a greater degree than is common in works of the time.'

The British Museum did well at the Borghese sale in 1892. Among the treasures then acquired was the 'Missarum Liber Primus' of Francesco Soriano (Rome, 1609). This superbly bound volume (of which an illustration is given on p. 87) bears on its covers the Arms of Pope Paul V., to whom it formerly belonged. The frontispiece, by Philippe Thomasin, represents the Pontiff seated on his throne and receiving the book from the hands of its author, who, it will be remembered, arranged Palestrina's 'Missa Papæ Marcelli' for eight voices.

While there he desired to make the acquaintance of Caldara, then enjoying a great reputation in the Eternal City. In order to effect this, and finding no other means of gratifying his wish, it is said that Bernier entered Caldara's household as a servant. One day, finding on his master's desk an unfinished manuscript, Bernier took up a pen and completed the composition. This adventure was the means of promoting an intimate friendship between 'master' and 'servant.'

A beautifully illustrated folio volume bears the title 'Neue und Curieuse Theatrialische Tantz-Schul,' by Gregorio Lambranzi, a ballet-master and teacher of dancing at Venice early in the 18th century. Above each of the fine plates that give distinction to this book is the music to the 'curious' dances, some of them comic in the dancers' attitudes, which form the collection. Who was Conrad Peysel? Ephratæ Sumptibus Societatis: 1754.

This folio volume — published at Ephrata, Pennsylvania, in 1754—consists of a collection of hymns sung by the 'Seventh-Day Dunkers' (or Tunkers). The words of the hymns and the music staves are printed, but the clefs and notes are written in by hand throughout the 213 pages of this interesting tune-book. These Dunkers (or Tunkers) were members of a Baptist community, hence the name of their sect, Tunkers, from the German Tunker, a dipper. Further information in regard to them, and Conrad Peysel, the compiler of the above book, is furnished in Blunt's 'Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, &c.,' in the subjoined quotation:

The Tunkers of America were an offshoot of a Baptist community at Schwartzenau, on the bank of the river Eder, in Germany, some members of whom emigrated to America under the leadership of Conrad Peysel and others about the year 1719. Peysel afterwards separated from the rest and formed a peculiar settlement at Ephrata, in Lancaster county, about fifty miles from Philadelphia. Here he and his companions built a town in the form of a triangle, having a large orchard in the midst, and being surrounded by a belt of mulberry and apple trees. There they dwelt in wooden houses of three storeys height, which were each a kind of monastery. They dressed very much in the style of monks and nuns, men and women lived under different roofs, used a vegetable diet, and practised considerable mortification.

Many other rare volumes might be mentioned, e.g., the very scarce Spanish treatises and musical works purchased at the Heredia sale in 1891, and the early Italian operas bought at the Borghese sale in 1892. Space must, however, be reserved for mention of three works associated with three great masters of music — Bach, Haydn, and Beethoven. The first is of supreme interest, as it is Part II. of Bach's 'Clavier Uebung' (Nürnberg, 1735), a set of proof-sheets containing many corrections in the great cantor's own hand. Another work which has passed through the hands of its composer is and those mentioned in the second instalment of this article, is some of the rubbish that is received in the way of comic songs, largely from America. The mere titles of these songs, though often amusing, speak for their worthlessness. Here are a few of the more recent specimens, picked out at random:

'The British Museum Library is the best managed and the best catalogued in the world.' This is the opinion of so well qualified an expert as Mr. James E. Matthew, and the present writer, with a working experience of its music section covering a period of nearly thirty years, fully endorses that statement. In the course of conversation Mr. Barclay Squire modestly but unconvincingly disclaims his important share in obtaining so gratifying a result. He says: 'If, as I hope, the Museum music is better looked after and arranged now than it was in former days, much of the credit is due to my chiefs, Sir Edward Bond and Sir Edward Maunde Thompson, the past and present Directors, and to Dr. Garnett and Dr. G. K. Fortescue, the late and present Keepers of the Printed Books. Though none of them were especially interested in music, they have always agreed to anything I have suggested without the slightest demur, and to Sir Edward Thompson I especially owe the reform by which it is piles of band-parts which we receive under the copyright law.

'In regard to music we buy, here again I have been left with almost a free hand. From abroad we get some rare works, from booksellers like Reeves we make good all kinds of gaps in the collection; but I always have tried to bear in mind that the Museum is not a mere antiquarian storehouse, and that we must keep thoroughly Times and other journals which I receive are matter, as the sizes are often so eccentric. a great help, and from them I am able to order whatever seems most important in Foreign music. I have tried especially to increase our collection of full-scores as much as possible, as they are beyond the means of the average student, and though we cannot afford to buy them very largely, I think we keep fairly abreast of the times.

'It has been to me a very encouraging sign to find that the Museum music is more and more widely recognized abroad. Eitner spent several exercises. Only to-day I have received an official thus: notice of my election on the committee of the Austrian Denkmäler, and within the last month my name has been placed on the committee of the Haydn edition and on the International committee for drawing up a catalogue of old music. But I do not in the least feel that these are personal matters, but merely the recognition of the importance of the British Museum in European music, and I hope that this is the view you will take. Anything that brings the Museum musical library more into touch with Continental music does good to English music and to English musicians, and all working.

'I may mention that we sometimes receive some extraordinary applications. Once a missionary inquired if I could find him any Abyssinian native music that could be adapted to the English Church Service so that it could be sung by Kaffirs'!

The various publications then find their way to the music-room, where they are sorted into two sections, vocal and instrumental. Mr. Barclay Squire then decides no longer necessary to catalogue the terrible which shall be catalogued, and puts aside those pieces—band-parts, comic songs, &c.—that are to be recorded on the 'index slips' referred to above, the titles of the instrumental pieces being written on green paper and the vocal pieces on white paper. These 'index slips' are entered alphabetically under their titles (not composers' names), and although they do not appear in the catalogue volumes, the pieces they represent can always be obtained upon application. Mr. William Barclay Squire, the officer in charge of the printed music at the British Museum, was born in London on October 16, 1855. Though a native of the metropolis, he is north country on both sides, as his father came of a Yorkshire and his mother of a Lancashire family. The only son of the late Mr. William Squire, of Feltham Hill, Middlesex, he studied in Germany before entering, in 1875, Pembroke College, Cambridge. this, after all, is the main object for which we are He took honours in the History Tripos in 1878 and obtained his B.A. degree, the M.A. degree following in 1902. During his Cambridge period Mr. Squire took an active part in the musical life of the University, especially in the work of the Cambridge University Musical Society, then in the hey-dey of its existence under Mr. (now Sir) C. V. Stanford. Among the well-known musical undergraduates at that time were Mr. Abdy Williams, the Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland.

After leaving Cambridge, Mr. Squire was admitted a solicitor in 1883, but he has not practised since 1885. Mr. Squire says that complaints have been made that he does so little himself in regard to the literature of music—that he does not read papers before the Musical Association, and seldom writes anything for publication. To this charge—of which he is certainly not guilty—he says 'I have several excuses. First, I think that a librarian should not produce himself, but be the means of producing in others. Like Kundry, his motto should be Dienen! This was the ideal of the greatest of modern librarians, Henry Bradshaw, and I have always thought it is the right one to follow as well as one can. Secondly, apart from this, seven hours' hard work at the Museum and as much as I can afterwards put in at the Royal College of Music, are as much as the most enthusiastic musical grubber can do.'

In concluding this chit-chat on the printed music in the British Museum Library, the writer gratefully acknowledges the unfailing courtesy and valued help of Mr. George F. Barwick, Superintendent of the Reading Room, and especially that of Mr. W. Barclay Squire, to whose kindness, spreading over many years, he takes this opportunity of bearing the fullest testimony, not for himself only but also for the readers of The Musical Times.

A COLLECTION OF LIBRETTI.

In the whole range of musical literature there are few things which seem to link us so completely with the past as a collection of old libretti. Such relics can never be common. Printed in sufficient numbers to serve the immediate purpose in days when audiences were smaller than in our own, they served their purpose and went the way of all such ephemeral publications.

It was to the early attempts at opera that these little works owed their first appearance. The famous 'Balet comique de la Royne,' 1582, was rather a publication of the work, with music and illustrations of the decorations, than really a libretto. earliest publication of the words alone of a musical work, for the use of the audience, I believe to be that of the opera 'Dafne,' the words of which were by Rinuccini. He was one of the coterie which met at the palace of Giovanni Bardi in Florence, consisting of the poet, Pietro Strozzi and Jacopo Corsi, noblemen of that city, Vincenzo Galilei, the father of the astronomer, and Giulio Caccini, Emilio del Cavaliere and Jacopo Peri, all three musicians. 'Dafne' was set to music by Peri, but the work has entirely disappeared. The poem was published by Marescotti in Florence in 1600, of which a copy is before me. It is a thin quarto of 22 pages, and the title informs us that it was performed before the Grand Duchess of Tuscany by Signor Jacopo Corsi, in his palace and at his expense. The poem is printed in italics throughout. 'Interlocutori' are Ovid, Venus, Amor, Apollo, Dafne, a Messenger, with a chorus of Nymphs and Shepherds. The work can scarcely be called dramatic. The name of the composer is nowhere mentioned.

In addition to 'Dafne' I have before me a copy of the libretto of Rinuccini's better known 'Euridice,' as well as its very rare musical setting by Jacopo Peri (Frienze, 1600). Both words and music bear this date on the title, with a statement that the work was performed at the marriage of the 'Christianissima Maria Medici, Regina di Francia e di Navarre.' The libretto consists of fifteen numbered leaves, i.e., thirty pages, and strange to say, while the music is printed by Marescotti, the libretto is printed by Cosimo Giunti. The poem of Rinuccini seems to have been so greatly appreciated that it was set again to music by Caccini in the same year. It will thus be seen that 1600 was a year of great musical activity and the actual date of the origin of operatic performances. One other work Rinuccini produced, 'L'Arianna,' and this was set to music by Monteverde in the year 1607, the first attempt at dramatic composition of that great innovator. Rinuccini was so highly esteemed at Leghorn as late as 1802.

The industry of a former collector succeeded in bringing together a long series of libretti. They are contained in fourteen volumes, varying in size from quarto to duodecimo, and are in the Italian, French and English languages, bound together quite regardless of any definite order, probably as several works having no connection with music.

As may be expected, the larger proportion is Italian. Verse and music in that country have always been the natural expression of national as well as of private emotions. It is to Florence, in all the Arts the centre of intellectual energy, that we are principally indebted. A collection of works of this kind is not without great historical value, for one often comes across the name of a musician now completely forgotten. In many cases, no doubt, the music did not attain to the honours of print-possibly did not deserve them-and was written to serve the purpose of a special occasion only. Although the date and place of performance are frequently given, the name of the composer of the music is omitted, he being probably well known at the time as the organist or choirmaster of the church where the celebration was held. But if from time to time one is baffled by such omissions—as, for example, in the case of a further festivity in honour of the royal marriage in 1600—'Rime cantate nel giardino del Signor Riccardo Riccardi con l'occasione d'una festa fatta per la Reina'-it is refreshing to come across a 'Canzone delle lodi d'Austria Cantata al Sereniss-Arciduca Carlo, alla Villa Imperiale della Arciduchessa Granduchessa di Toscana, 1624, and to find on the last page 'La Musica del Sig. Jacopo Peri,' for the existence of such a work appears to be entirely unknown to the biographers of the musician. In 1623 we get a glimpse of a composer who at that time enjoyed great reputation, Marco da Gagliano, whose 'Il Medoro' was performed at the Palace of the Grand Duke of Tuscany to celebrate the election of Ferdinand II. as Emperor. It was no doubt this event which called forth the work of Peri. It is worthy of note that the title-page of 'Il Medoro' gives to the City of Plowers its beautiful old name of Fiorenza.

Unfortunately in the collection of works perthan a century, and the succeeding works greatly fall off in interest, consisting mainly of words of oratorios performed in churches in that city, sometimes by the Brothers of the order of St. Philipp Neri, who founded the order with the special object of using the attractions of music to draw the young to the services of the church. The composers, where their names are given, seldom find a place in the various books of reference, and would call up no associations in the mind of the well-read musician. Their presence is mainly interesting as evidence of musical The well-known 'Passione' of Jomelliof which our own publisher Bremner may claim the honour of issuing the only printed edition—was performed in 1766, while Trajetta, a composer of great but forgotten reputation, is represented by a finely printed libretto of the opera 'Olimpiade,' they were acquired, while the collection contains in St. Petersburg in 1770. This must be an error, as the present copy is dated 1767. Eitner gives the date as 1758. Trajetta is also represented by an oratorio, 'S. Ifigenia in Etiopia,' arranged, with apologies, from the composer's opera 'Ifigenia in Tauride'! One work of great interest is 'La Felicità Pubblica, componimento drammatico da Signor Luigi Cherubini, 1774.' The composer was born in 1760, and therefore of the mature age of fourteen at this performance, which, strange to say, took place in a chapel of the Cathedral, for the characters taking part are Jupiter, Pallas, Apollo and Mercury. The work appears in the catalogue drawn up by himself, and published after his death by Bottée de Toulmon. It is interesting to note that Cherubini was born in the year following the death of Handel, that he died in 1842, while his widow survived him twenty years, dying in 1862, 102 years after the birth of her husband! Sarti is represented by the oratorios 'S. Teodora' and 'S. Elena, and a cantata, 'Medonte' (1782). Eitner mentions an opera with that title as produced in 1783, which may possibly have been this work arranged for the stage. The most recent contents of the collection are four of Lord Burghersh's operas: 'L' Eroe di Lancastro,' 'Lo Scompiglio' (both stated to have been performed in his Palace at Florence), 'Il Torneo' and 'La Fedra.' Lord Burghersh was our representative at the Court of Tuscany, and as Lord Westmorland was well-known for the interest he took in the Royal Academy of Music and in the Antient Concerts.

The libretti issued in other Italian cities need not detain us long. Lesser places such as Alessandria, Arezzo, Cremona, Rimini, Lucca, Lesser places such as Pistoja (by an unrecorded oratorio 'Esther' by Clari) are all represented. From Parma we have 'Le Feste d' Apollo,' performed at the Court Theatre to celebrate the marriage of the Infante Don Ferdinando and the Archduchess Maria Amalia. It is beautifully illustrated by a native artist named Martini, who afterwards settled in formed at Florence there now occurs a gap of more | London as an engraver; the music is a pasticcio from the works of Gluck. 'Il Diletto,' by Bartolomeo Guerra, 1634, is interesting from certain notes on the orchestration. The Introduction is a 'Sinfonia di viole, violini, tiorbe and clavicembale,' while a vocal solo is accompanied by a pandora and clavicembalo, and a ritornello by 'due violini e tiorbo.' Rome is but poorly represented, and by no works worthy of remark. Of operas performed at Venice is one of great interest, 'I Guiocchi d'Agrigenti' by Paisiello, composed for the opening of the famous theatre, La Fenice, a picture of the façade of which is given. It must have been a great occasion, as Banti, Sessi and Pacchierotti are all included in the caste, while the ballet was under the direction of the famous Vigano, who afterwards was brought into relations with Beethoven over the 'Prometheus' ballet. In addition there is a stumpy little duothe work of Metastasio which it seemed the ambition decimo volume containing the words of a number of every composer of the period to set to music. of operas performed in that pleasure-loving city Both Fétis, and Clément in the 'Dictionnaire between the years 1673 and 1716, each with a Lyrique,' state that Trajetta's setting was produced quaint engraved frontispiece. The composer's name is in most cases given, Legrenzi being the best known; but when this is omitted, it is easily traced in the excellent catalogue by Antonio Groppo, of musical dramas produced there from

The French books, although numerous, are not particularly interesting, as they run very much to vaudevilles. The practice was to print at the end the music of the songs introduced, unless sung to familiar tunes. Among the operas of Gluck is a book of 'Alceste,' for the resumption of the work in 1786. The part of Alceste was taken by Mlle. Saint-Huberti, who was afterwards so mysteriously murdered, with her husband, at Barnes. A duodecimo volume contains seven of Lully's operas, each with a well-executed frontispiece. In no case is the printer's name given; probably it was a pirated edition.

The English libretti are few but interesting. The first in order of time is Purcell's 'The Prophetess, or the History of Dioclesian, written by F. Beaumont and J. Fletcher, with Alterations and Additions After the manner of an Opera.' London: Jacob Tonson, 1690. The 'alterations,' it is well known, were made by Betterton, and Purcell's music was only incidental. It is pleasant to compare this with the music as printed in the same year by Heptinstall. Curiously enough, the word-book makes no mention of the composer's Another work of interest is 'Comus, a Mask (Now adapted to the Stage) as altered from Milton's Mask at Ludlow Castle . . . The Musick was composed by Mr. Henry Lawes.' This was published by Dodstey in 1738, and I suppose was the first public performance of the work. Mrs. Cibber, Mrs. Arne, and Mr. Beard took musical parts.

But I must bring these notes to a close, pausing to point out that the words of Winter's 'Trionfo dell' Amor Fraterno,' 1804, were by Mozart's favourite and most successful librettist, Lorenzo da Ponte, the cosmopolitan adventurer who at that time was 'poet' to the opera, and who also carried on business as a librarian in London in partnership with a certain Nardini at whose shop the book was to be obtained. In the following year 'La Clemenza di Scipione' by J. C. Bach, performed for the benefit of Mr. Billington, is stated to be sold by P. da Ponte, who was probably a brother of Lorenzo. the libretto of 'Zauberflöte,' for the benefit of Signor Naldi, the bass vocalist and violoncellist, was published by a printer whose name is still to the fore, Brettell. The title-page states that the price is two shillings and no more! Probably some imposition had been going on. And now I must stop.

Every lovely fancy, every moment of delight, every thought and thrill of pleasure which music calls forth, or which, already existing, is beautified and hallowed by music, does not die.— J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Oh, Clara, I have been in paradise to-day! They played at the rehearsal a symphony [in C major] of Franz Schubert's. How I wish you had been there, for I cannot describe it to you. The instruments all sing like remarkably intelligent human voices, and the scoring is worthy of Beethoven. Then the length, the divine length, of it! It is a whole four-volume novel, longer than the Choral Symphony. I was supremely happy, and had nothing left to wish for, except that you were my wife and that I could write such symphonies myself.

The Kyrle Society has now been established more than thirty years, and yet there are many who know little of its ramifications and still less of the origin of its name. When Miss Octavia Hill and her sisters started a Society having for its object the brightening of the lives of the poor in London, they called it after the 'Man of Ross,' of whom Pope wrote:

All our praises, why should lords engross? Rise, honest Muse, and sing the 'Man of Ross'; Pleased Vaga echoes through her winning bounds, And rapid Severn hoarse resounds.

This 'Man of Ross' was John Kyrle (1637-1724), a country squire and an ideal philanthropist, whose memory the good people of the little market town on the banks of the Wye love to keep green. Three branches of work are carried on by the Society—the Decorative, the Open Spaces, and the Musical. The first of these has considerably developed, and decoration work for schools, &c., is carried on by many ladies enrolled in this Branch. The Open Spaces Branch is devoted to efforts helping towards the opening of small gardens in London and gifts of plants and seeds to such. The Society has also rendered good service in promoting the preservation of open spaces in and around London, Parliament Hill being one of these 'lungs' which the Society had a share in obtaining for the public for ever.

The Musical Branch of the Kyrle Society was, from the first, perhaps, the most frequently in demand and most warmly appreciated. It modestly began with gatherings of friends, who met at Miss Octavia Hill's house and who practised, under her direction, partsongs which were sung at small concerts given to the blind and the very poor in London. This led to the study of oratorio music—the choral masterpieces of Bach, Handel, Haydn, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn, which have frequently been performed in different parts of the metropolis.

Mr. Malcolm Lawson was the first conductor of the Society. On his resignation in 1885 the committee were fortunate in securing the services of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, who still holds that responsible office. Until 1903 the late Dr. E. H. Turpin was the organist, an important post now efficiently held by Mr. E. G. Croager. The Society's performances take place in churches situated in various parts of London, and the rehearsals are held weekly (on Tuesday evenings) at the Church of England School for Girls, 6, Upper Baker Street. The membership of the Society is entirely voluntary, no fees being required. Mr. Docker asks us to state that he specially needs sopranos and tenors to augment his choral forces. Applications for membership may be made to the hon. secretary, Miss Borrodaile, 63, Gordon Mansions, Francis Street, W.C., or to Mr. F. A. W. Docker, 68, Gordon Mansions, from whom all particulars can be obtained.

Dr. F. H. Torrington conducted Handel's oratorio the 'Messiah' for the twenty-fifth time in the city of Toronto on December 30, with the customary success. In celebration of this event an address was presented to the conductor by the Mayor of Toronto couched in the following terms:

To F. H. Torrington, Mus. Doc. (Tor.), Conductor of the Philharmonic Society of Toronto, and Toronto Festival Chorus and Orchestra.

DEAR SIR,—Advantage is taken of this notable occasion, the twenty-fifth performance of the oratorio of the 'Messiah under your conductorship, to convey to you, in obedience to a unanimous resolution of the City Council, the thanks of the citizens of Toronto for your valuable services to the cause of musical art in this community. No more pleasant duty has fallen to my lot as Mayor, than that which I am thus called upon to discharge. Your advent amongst us as organist of the Metropolitan Church in the year 1873, was hailed as a significant event in the musical history of our city, and to the energy and ability which you immediately began to display, and which you have displayed without abatement down to the present day, are due, in a great degree, the proud position which our city now holds as a centre of musical culture. You have, indeed, a legitimate claim to the title which has been fondly bestowed upon you, 'The Father of Good Music in Toronto.' It was a great achievement to have performed such a work as the 'Messiah' under any conditions in this city twenty-five years ago, but to have given it a worthy rendition, and this with purely local talent both vocal and instrumental, was a triumph of which you have a right to be proud. That triumph you have repeated year by year with this and other classic compositions, and thus you have accomplished great things, not only in the cultivation of the public taste, but in the training of hundreds of singers and instrumentalists, some of whom have meanwhile risen to high distinction. Your work has been in this respect essentially a work of civic patriotism, Your work has and the congratulations now tendered you by the official authorities of the city are, I am assured, heartily seconded by the leaders of the several musical organizations which now flourish in Toronto. That you may be spared for many years to continue your noble work, and to witness the steady growth of pure and elevated taste in the art of which you are so distinguished a master, is the earnest prayer of your fellow citizens.

Signed on behalf of the Corporation of the city of Toronto this 30th day of December, A.D. 1907.

W. A. LITTLEJOHN, City Clerk.
R. T. COADY, City Treasurer.

After Dr. Torrington had made a suitable reply to this gratifying appreciation of his services to music in Toronto, Mr. E. W. Schuch, on behalf of the musicians of the city, presented him with 'a large and commodious easy chair.' Accompanying the gift was an address which referred to Dr. Torrington's unwearying and enthusiastic efforts in the cause of music, to the growth of local interest in the art, and testified to his self-denying energy. He ranked among them as 'the creator and builder of an education which to-day contributes nearly two thousand trained voices organized in various choral efforts.' Dr. Torrington thus feel encouraged to continue and manager will again, for the ninth time, be in the the good work he is doing for the art of music in Britain beyond the Seas.

On more than one occasion we have referred, and always with pleasure, to the good work carried on by the Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association at Bethnal Green. The last annual report and balance sheet (1906-7) reports gratifying progress in every particular, the popularity of the concerts and the enthusiasm of the audiences being well maintained. To quote from this document:

During the season there has been a large addition to the members of the Choral Society, who now number about 180. Especially gratifying is the increase to the ranks of the tenors and basses, always the Society's weak point, and it is hoped that during the coming season the numbers may be still further increased to a choir of 200 well-balanced voices.

The works performed at Excelsior Hall [Bethnal Green] were Elijah (Mendelssohn), Golden Legend (Sullivan), Song of Destiny (Brahms) and John Gilpin (Cowen).

The orchestra, in addition to these choral concerts, appeared at the two orchestral concerts given during the season. During the coming season it is intended to hold the orchestral rehearsals weekly in a hall in the West-End, and the committee hope to gain a large increase in the number of really good amateur players.

The Bethnal Green L.C.C. Schools again sent a goodly muster of boys for instruction in connection with the Excelsior Boys Choir, and some very good work was done during the season.

A recent performance of Haydn's 'Creation' given by the Society is noticed on p. 112. Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, the director of the music, and Mr. A. P. Charles, the zealous honorary secretary and treasurer, and those associated with them, are to be warmly congratulated on the success which attends their efforts in brightening the lives of the dwellers in Bethnal Green through the medium of good music. The cost of these performances is of course considerable, and although the people pay what they can afford for admission (3d. and 6d. for the majority of the seats), the receipts cannot meet the heavy expenditure involved. All well-wishers to such a laudable enterprise are therefore invited to become Associates of the Society, at an annual subscription of one guinea and upwards, a subscription which carries with it two free seats for the Association's annual West-End concert given at Queen's Hall. The financial help which is thus asked for should be ungrudgingly given for so deserving an object.

Bristol is to hold its twelfth musical festival in the month of October. The outline programme consists of the following works: A church cantata, or motet, Bach; Choral Symphony, Beethoven; Requiem, Berlioz; Elijah, Mendelssohn; Die Walkure, Wagner; King Olaf, Elgar; and, for the first time in England, the Passion Oratorio, Felix Woyrsch. The actual novelties will consist of a setting of Tennyson's 'Ode to Wellington,' by Sir Charles Stanford, and a cantata on the subject of Andromeda, by Mr. Cyril B. It is probable that two unaccompanied Rootham. pieces will find their way into the scheme, in compositions by Samuel Wesley and Robert Lucas de Pearsall, both natives of Bristol: this would certainly be a welcome feature and a further tribute to local composers. The instrumental works will include one Tchaikovsky's symphonies, Brahms's concerto, and Grieg's Pianoforte concerto. Mr. George Riseley retains his place as conductor—this being his fourth festival, while the onerous duties of secretary experienced hands of Mr. Walter J. Kidner, to whom special reference is made on p. 94.

It is gratifying to learn that the Hallé Orchestra Pension Fund is making steady progress. The capital has been increased during the past year by £522 3s. 10d., bringing the total amount up to £4,344 1s. 11d. As this is the jubilee year of the foundation of the Hallé Concerts at Manchester—the first performance having been given on January 30, 1858—a special effort is being made to raise the Fund to £10,000, this amount, according to actuarial advice, being necessary before any substantial pensions can be granted. Donations may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. Henry Smith, 134, Deansgate, Manchester, or to Messrs. Forsyth Brothers, Manchester.

It may not be without interest to reprint the programme of the first concert conducted by Sir (then Mr.) Charles Hallé at Manchester, given in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, Saturday, January 30, 1858:

The orchestra on that occasion numbered fifty-nine performers (including Lockwood, the harpist). Of these, thirty-six were players on stringed instruments—1st and 2nd violins, ten each; tenors (violas), six; violoncellos and double-basses, five each. Nineteen players were imported—nine from London, five (including M. Jacoby, one of the 1st violins) from Paris, two each from Liverpool and Leicester, and one (Signor Raspi, a bassoonist) from Turin; the remaining forty—two full scores—were designated on the programme 'Local artists.'

Newcastle-on-Tyne is making preparations for a musical festival. In furtherance of this object an inaugural and influential meeting was held on January 13 in the Council Chamber of the Town Hall, the Lord Mayor (Councillor W. J. Sanderson) In an interesting address Mr. C in the chair. Francis Lloyd, one of Newcastle's most cultured amateur musicians, set forth the desirability of a festival. Thereupon — on the motion of the Lord Mayor, seconded by Mr. John Pattinson (President of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union)—it was unanimously agreed to hold a triennial musical festival in the city, provided that a satisfactory guarantee fund is established. In so wealthy and prosperous a district as Tyneside there should surely be no difficulty in meeting the requirements of the guarantee condition. The result of this successful meeting was the appointment of the Duke of Northumberland as president of the proposed festival, the Duke of Portland, the Marquis of Londonderry, the Earl of Durham, Viscount Ridley, Lord Barnard, and other noblemen as vice-presidents; while the Lord Mayor is chairman and Mr. C. Francis Lloyd is the honorary treasurer. Last, but not least, the committee are to be warmly congratulated upon having secured so capable a secretary as Mr. J. B. Clark, the genial and indefatigable secretary of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union. In recording the seed-sowing of this Newcastle festival, we heartily wish it all success, with the hope that it may arrive at a full fruition.

Leeds musicians are at present much concerned about the Municipal School of Music which the Corporation is now launching. It is really an old institution, one of the many educational undertakings of the local Mechanics' Institute, but promises to be strengthened and amplified under the new conditions. Local musicians form the teaching staff, but though a considerable number are included, those who are left in the cold are, not unnaturally, complaining of unfair competition from an institution which has the rates behind it. If, however, it gives the people at large a better kind of musical education, it will do a good to the community that will outweigh any possible loss to individuals, much as this is to be regretted.

The music of Mr. Delius's orchestral 'Rhapsody' on the old Lincolnshire folk-song 'Brigg Fair' heard for the first time in England at Liverpool last month (see p. 115), with the composer as an interested listener, is not, as might be imagined, descriptive of the hurly-burly of a country fair. The composer idealises love-scenes, thoughts, and moods, in music of tender and melancholy beauty. The old tune is a central text round which is woven and interwoven some remarkable polyphony, and if indefinite in plan, as the title infers, the movement is continuous and ever-varied in tone-colour. By degrees the music leaves its reverie mood and becomes passionate and intense. A peal of bells is added to the surging tones of the orchestra, and a climax of constructive mastery is reached, before the scene begins gradually to fade There is no apparent striving for effect in this beautiful tone-picture, whose naturalness and sincerity of style are evident. The orchestration is as fanciful as Debussy's and as masterly as that of Strauss, although it differs from the methods of both composers.

Thirty-two composers have set to music the prize cantata for the Norwich musical festival, which, like Hereford, Sheffield and Bristol, will be held in the autumn. These compositions are now in the hands of the trio of adjudicators, Mr. Frederick Delius, Mr. Granville Bantock, and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, whose verdict will be awaited with interest. The festival committee state that they 'are glad so many composers have sent in works, especially as it is the first occasion on which any festival committee has instituted such a competitive scheme confined to British composers.'

The Florence Choral Union had an enthusiastic start-off on January 6 with upwards of forty members. Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' was put in rehearsal, together with some madrigals, and it is hoped that the first concert will take place soon after Easter. Rehearsals are held on Mondays from 4.30 to 6 p.m., the meetings taking place in the Sala Grande of the Circolo Filologico, Palazzo Ferroni, Via Tornabuoni. The musical director and conductor of the Florence Choral Union is Miss Jessie B. Handley, organist of Holy Trinity Church, and the accompanist is Miss C. R. Valintine. The prospectus states: 'It is hoped that a large number of English-speaking ladies and gentlemen will join the Choral Union and help forward its success.' May that success be fully realised!

During a recent performance in the north of England of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' part of the platform gave way, with the result that some of the sopranos and tenors of the choir were precipitated 'down below.' Happily no one was hurt; in fact, the accident caused some little amusement by reason of its realism, for it occurred during the earthquake chorus!

The following is a specimen of musical criticism in a provincial journal, the occasion being one of a series of Chamber Concerts:

These concerts particularly appeal to the more cultured amongst lovers of music. Fragmentary blossoms of harmonic melody culled with wisdom and discrimination from the garden of the world's greatest composers, they constitute at once an intellectual relaxation and exercise. The concert opened with a really splendid rendering of Mozart's Quartet in G minor (1756-1791). . . . The characteristics of the three principal movements, which subscribe to the constitution of what is truly an amazing composition, were indicated with masterly clarity and precision. . . .

Miss — is a violinist of considerable promise. Her technique is sound, at times standing on the threshold of the brilliant, but of infinitely greater remark is the power possessed by this clever artiste of interpreting the inmost poetry of sound. Consciously or unconsciously we cannot tell, but the fact remains, she has achieved a limited understanding of the psychology of tone.

It is indeed a pleasure to listen to such conscientious and able handling of the unfortunately much malingered (sic) instrument, the pianoforte, as was accorded a profoundly attentive audience by Miss ——. The innate beauty and delicacy of her items, 'Wiegenlied' and 'Si oisean Jetais' (sic), Henselt, were rendered with remarkable artistic finesse. The concluding item of this programme was certainly one of the finest, and consisted of a genuinely beautiful interpretation of rich, mellow, and bounteous melodies of Haydn's unforgettable string Quartet in D major (Op. 64, No. 5), which is, perhaps, the most haunting of any of the seventy odd produced by that great musician.

DR. E. W. NAYLOR.

THE PRIZE-WINNER OF THE OPERA COMPETITION.

The prize of £500 offered by Messrs. Ricordi & Co. for an original opera from the pen of a British-born composer, has been awarded to Dr. E. W. Naylor for a work entitled 'The Angelus,' the libretto of which is by Mr. Wilfrid Thornely, of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Out of the fifty-two approved librettos sent in, twenty-nine were set to music, with the above result, upon which Dr. Naylor is to be warmly congratulated. The adjudicators were Mr. Joseph Bennett, Mr. Percy Pitt, Mr. Tito Ricordi and Sir Charles Stanford, M. Massenet and Dr. Richter having retired from the list of indees as pricipally appeared.

list of judges as originally announced. Dr. Edward Woodall Naylor was born at Scarborough, February 9, 1867. He is the eldest son of the late Dr. John Naylor, organist successively of St. Mary's and All Saints' Churches, Scarborough, and of York Minster. In regard to his early training in music, he says: 'My father taught me the pianoforte and gave me a few lessons on the organ when he had time, but I learned most from watching My two brothers and I were boys in his choir, and every Sunday morning before we went to church he used to play to us boys selections from great works, e.g., Bach's B minor Mass, Beethoven's Mass in D, Cherubini's in D minor, the Choral Symphony, Tannhäuser, the Ring, and Parsifal, while we learned a good deal of Schubert, Schumann and others through overhearing the pianoforte lessons given by my father. And yet he was a man who perhaps never had the chance of hearing a good performance of anything except once every few years, when he went to Leeds or London. Besides these modern things, he played to us 16th century music, e.g., Byrd, Weelkes, Palestrina, &c., and the pieces in Hawkins' History. My father introduced us to Widor and Saint-Saëns thirty years ago or more. Our vicar, the Rev. Robert Brown-Borthwick, who scope for had lived much abroad, used to sing French writing.

songs, by Massenet and Faure; and he introduced French music into our church—Dubois and Adam—so we had a cosmopolite training.

'My father never taught us harmony or counterpoint. He said we must be musicians first, and then we should find the books on theory rather below our mark. I remember well his almost declining to explain the figures in the bass of the Corelli sonatas. He was anxious to keep our attention on the music itself; not its mechanical adjuncts. In the same way, though he was a most ingenious contrapuntist, he never asked us to write such things, being, I think, afraid lest we should find it pretty easy and so mistake queer enigmas for music.

'It worked well with us, for my second brother, Charles (late of the Harrogate Kursaal), and myself found we wanted very little formal work at such things in order to pass counterpoint papers for the Mus. Bac. degree, as it then was, at Cambridge.'

For a short time Dr. Naylor was a student at the Royal College of Music. After his pupilage (1888) he composed a scena, 'Merlin and the Gleam.' This was performed at the College concert of July 11, 1892. On the same occasion Miss Clara Butt 'came out.' THE MUSICAL TIMES thus criticised the scena:

Mr. John Sandbrook was the soloist in a MS. scena for baritone and orchestra, a setting of Lord Tennyson's poem 'Merlin and the Gleam,' by Mr. E. W. Naylor, an ex-student. It cannot be said that the young composer has succeeded, and it would, of course, have been unreasonable to expect him to succeed in doing for Lord Tennyson's poem what Schumann has been said to have done for the second part of Goethe's 'Faust'—viz., elucidated, by the magic of his music, the poet's meaning; but we cannot but admire Mr. Naylor's courage in attacking a poem which, to an average reader, may seem to stand in need of elucidation. The scena, which is of considerable length, is more remarkable for the fanciful, and often melodious and appropriate music given to the orchestra, than for any interesting phrases the voice part may contain; and Mr. Naylor may be urged to try his strength on a work which will give him more scope for exercising his undoubted talent for orchestral writing.

From 1884 to 1888 Dr. Naylor was a choral scholar at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and took his B.A. degree in 1887. To complete his degree record, he took the Mus. B. and M.A. in 1891, and the Mus. D. in 1899, for composition only, being the first successful candidate under the new regulations. For eight years he was organist of two London churches—St. Michael's, Chester Square, 1889-96 (a post once held by Sir Arthur Sullivan) and St. Mary's, Kilburn, till 1897. In the latter year he returned to Cambridge as an assistant-master at the Leys School, and took up work again at Emmanuel College as organist, an office he still holds. Since his appointment he has entirely changed the character of the services, which are sung exclusively by tenors and basses, and he has composed nearly all the music—canticles, anthems, hymns, &c.—used in the Chapel during the past ten years.

—used in the Chapel during the past ten years.

In 1902 he was appointed Lecturer in Music of his College, a lectureship which, he thinks, is unique. In that capacity he has discoursed upon:

'Text-books of music from A.D. 1000 to 1600'; 'Early 17th century masque music'; '18th century composers'; 'Chamber music of 16th and 17th centuries'; 'The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book'; 'Heinrich Schutz'; '19th century violin sonatas, from Mozart to Strauss'; 'Shakespeare and music'; '18th century opera'; 'Browning and music'; 'Romanticism in modern music,' tracing it back without break to the 16th century.

His course for this term is 'Ten great harmonists: from Jacobus Handl to Verdi.' His contributions to musical literature include 'Shakespeare and Music' (1896), a volume on the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book (1905), and he was one of the English translators of Oscar Bie's 'History of the pianoforte' (1899). He has read two papers before the Musical Association—on 'Verdi and Wagner,' November, 1893, and 'Some characteristics of Heinrich Schütz,' December, 1905.

In addition to the work above referred to, Dr. Naylor's compositions for the church include an Evening Service in A for double choir, in constant use at King's College, Cambridge; Services for boys' voices, sung at Corpus Christi College; Te Deum and Benedictus in E flat for men's voices, written for St. Paul's Cathedral (all the foregoing being in MS.); services, anthems, &c. There can also be placed to his credit a Pianoforte trio in D (MS.), the part-songs 'Merry bells of Yule' (which goes into nine parts at the end) and 'Charge of the Light Brigade' (men's voices).

His cantata 'Arthur the King' was produced at Harrogate on December 14, 1902. Concerning this work he says: 'It was originally meant for a sort of opera. There was no overture, and the Lady of the Lake was made up afterwards to provide a good soprano part. But it was probably my first idea of opera, and I still hope to hear it in a theatre, with scenery and acting: perhaps with tableaux instead of acting.'

'With regard to my prize opera, "The Angelus" is a full-sized work, occupying the whole evening. The plot depends on Elixir Vita. Abbot Tunstall, just before his death, gives the secret to Francis, who finds the herb in a secluded part of Thessaly, where the Old Gods still live. The catastrophe is a strong expression of the necessary failure of man to turn aside the will of God. The music is, generally speaking, continuous through the acts. The voices are "at the top," not the band. There are not any leitmotives in the later Wagnerian sense; but there are associated melodies which appear often in the work. The opera is to be performed at Covent Garden in June, and I understand that an Italian version is being prepared to go with the English text. Let me add that my excellent librettist (Mr. Wilfrid Thornely) and I have already made some progress with a genuine comic opera.'

MR. WALTER J. KIDNER.

The business side of a great musical festival is considerably more obscured from the public view than its musical side. And yet what an amount of work is involved in arranging the manifold details of these recurring events! It is true that committees are appointed to decide this or that point and to make more or less relevant suggestions, but the burden and heat of the day are borne by the hardworking festival secretary, who, as in the present instance, is often the general manager of the whole concern. The near approach of the Bristol musical festival therefore affords an opportunity of calling attention to the splendid administrative services that have long been rendered to this Western music-making by the subject of this biographical sketch.

Walter James Kidner, the son of a musical father, was born at Weston-super-Mare (not at Bristol, as has been stated) on July 12, 1851. The family soon afterwards removed to Bristol, in which city Mr. Kidner has lived and moved and had his being for half-a-century. He began his musical career by learning Tonic sol-fa in a class taught by Mr. H. T. White. With this exception, and that of attending for three years in succession the summer course of the Tonic sol-fa College, he has been entirely self-taught in music. As a boy he came under the gracious influence of the late Alfred Stone, that lovable man and excellent musician whose premature death in 1878 caused a thrill of regret to pass through Bristol. As a youth of nineteen Kidner sang the tenor solos of the 'Messiah' at a performance conducted by Stone. Between the ages of fourteen and twenty-four he was in the office of Messrs. W. D. & H. O. Wills, the world-famed firm of tobacco manufacturers; in the year 1875, however, he forsook a business career to become a professional musician.

Alfred Stone was secretary and manager, as well as chorus-master, of the first Bristol musical festival, held in the year 1873. Three years later Walter Kidner, being free from his business engagement, helped his friend Stone in the management of the festival of 1876; in other words, he served his secretarial-managerial apprenticeship under an excellent master. On the death of Alfred Stone—on January 3, 1878, at the age of thirty-seven—Mr. Kidner took up the reins of management for the festival of 1879. This office of secretary and manager he has ever since held with conspicuous success. Therefore, now that Mr. Fred R. Spark, of Leeds, has retired, Mr. Kidner is the oldest festival secretary in regard to length of service—thirty years.

One of the first things he did on assuming office was to induce the festival committee to start and finance elementary singing-classes in different parts of the city, as nurseries to the festival choir. These classes, continued for nineteen years, were taught by Mr. Edward C. Cook, Mr. F. C. Maker, and the energetic secretary himself. Mr. Kidner has had a wide and long experience in class-teaching and choral conducting. For some time he had charge of a large choir of 500 voices consisting of the employees of Messrs. Wills, the rehearsals being held at the factory. He conducted for two years the Bristol Choirs Association, formed of the Free Church choirs of the city; the Bristol and Clifton Philharmonic Society; the Midsomer Norton Choral Society; and the Knowle District Choral Society. He also taught class-singing at the Bath High School for Girls, and at various boys and girls' schools in Bristol; and he still teaches at the Training College for Men. As a self-taught organist he formerly held appointments at St. George's Church, and Christ Church, Pill, near Bristol. His services as a private teacher of singing have been in great and constant request. An excellent tenor himself, this festival secretary has had the rare distinction of taking the place of a soloist at a festival performance. This was at the first Bristol meeting (in 1873), when he took the tenor parts in the quartets in the 'Messiah,' as the solo tenor refused to sing other than the solos.'

One of the pleasantest features of Mr. Kidner's professional work is his conductorship of the Society of Bristol Gleemen, founded by him in 1886. This vigorous and flourishing organization — of which Sir Frederick Wills, Bart., is the President—consists of about ninety male voices. The members meet fortnightly throughout the winter, for the pure love of vocal music, from 8 to 10 p.m., half-an-hour (9 to 9.30) being set apart for tea and conversation. Once a year a 'Ladies' night' concert is given at the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, when the refined and pure-toned singing of the Gleemen affords great enjoyment to large and appreciative audiences. Last year the Society came of age, when they gave a special concert to commemorate the occasion.

To return to the festival. Mr. Kidner has reduced the business part of this great organization to a science. A master of method, he has devised wonderful tables of figures which, elaborate though they be, are perfectly clear and understandable. By just glancing at these elaborate analyses he can tell in a moment the profit or loss of any of the eleven festivals that have been held, the expenses and the receipts and the attendances not only of each festival but of each separate concert, and so on. Moreover, so minute are the figures—even to fractions!—that he can tell the average price of each ticket sold. In 1902, this worked out at 7s. 11\frac{1}{6}d., and in 1905 at 8s. 9\frac{1}{2}d. per ticket. Mr. Kidner seems to have a remarkable gift for estimating the expenses of a festival. For instance, he forecast that the cost in 1905 would be £5,695; the actual expenses were £5,701 17s. 7d., thus showing that he was only £6 17s. 7d. out in his calculations. Although the Bristol musical festival is not 'run' in the interest of any charity, yet charity in one of its best forms, the relief of the sick, has greatly benefited by this Western music-making. At the morning performances a sum of no less than £2,097 2s. 4d. has been collected at the doors as the audiences have retired, with the result that one bed in each of the two hospitals in the city has been supported through these voluntary contributions. Mr. Kidner's business acumen is evidenced even in this matter. He arranges for a detachment of nurses to hold collection plates at the doors of Colston Hall, and thus a direct appeal is made which naturally has a better result than if the plates were entirely in the hands of mere men.

As he sits by his cosy fireside at Clifton, Mr. Kidner chats most pleasantly about his festival experiences. His duties as general manager are very arduous and exacting, but he has obtained such a grasp of every detail that the whole thing works smoothly under his experienced and guiding hand. We ventured to express to him a hope that he would write a history of the festival with which he has been so long and intimately acquainted. No one could discharge this task with greater zeal or accuracy, for not only does he know everything about the subject, but he has kept all the documents - word-books, newspaper-cuttings, &c.—relating thereto from the commencement. By carrying out this suggestion he would set his seal on an undertaking to which he has unwearingly devoted much willing toil during the past thirty years of his busy and useful life. His many friends regret that he is not so active physically as he used to be; but they rejoice in his mental vigour, and the hope will not be confined to Bristol that he may be permitted to engineer the festival of 1908 and those that follow it as successfully as he has those of the past.

The outline programme of the Bristol festival of 1908 is given on p. 91.

TWO MUSICAL KNIGHTS:

SIR GEORGE SMART AND SIR STERNDALE BENNETT.

The lives of these two musical knights cover the period of a century. When, in 1776, Smart was born, Mozart, Haydn, and Beethoven were living. The two masters last named he personally knew, while Bennett, born in 1816, was on terms of intimate friendship with Mendelssohn and Schumann. Smart was an excellent man of business, and Bennett was an artist of a most refined and sensitive type. Forty years have elapsed since Sir George Smart drew his last breath at the great age of ninety-one years. appears that he objected to having his biography written, therefore, except the dictionary articles and the newspaper obituary notices, no complete record of his life has been written. He, however, kept a diary during a part, though apparently not the whole of his long and eventful career; this diary has now been published under the editorship of Mr. and Miss Cox. The volume contains an excellent reproduction of the portrait of Smart in the National Portrait Gallery, and a characteristic canon specially written for the worthy knight by Beethoven.

Haydn is introduced very early in the book. When, in 1791, he paid his first visit to this country, Smart was one of the Children of the Chapel Royal, and Haydn found his way to that royal sanctuary. 'He was so pleased,' records Smart, 'with Dr. Dupuis's extempore fugues, that meeting the doctor as he came downstairs from the organ-loft after the service, he gave him two kisses in the Ambassadors' Court. This I saw him do, and I was very much surprised at that time at the operation.' In 1794 Smart was a youth of eighteen summers when Haydn visited England for the second time, and gave the young musician a lesson in playing the drums. Although the incident has already been related, it may be repeated in Smart's own words, merely adding that he played the violin (or viola) in Salomon's orchestra at half-a-guinea per concert, the concerts being given at the Hanover Square Rooms, with Haydn as the chief attraction.

At a rehearsal for one of these concerts the kettle drummer was not in attendance. Haydn asked, 'Can no one in the orchestra play the drums?' I replied immediately, 'I can.' 'Do so,' said he. I, foolishly, thought it was only necessary to beat in strict time, and that I could do so. Haydn came to me at the top of the orchestra, praised my beating in time, but observed upon my bringing the drumstick straight down, instead of giving an oblique stroke, and keeping it too long upon the drum, consequently stopping its vibration. 'The drummers in Germany,' he said, 'have a way of using the drumsticks so as not to stop the vibration'—at the same time showing me how this was done. 'Oh, very well,' I replied, 'we can do so in England, if you prefer it.' It was Haydn, therefore, who first taught me to play the drums, a thing I had never attempted before that day, and have not done often since.

The methods of provincial chorus-singing a hundred years ago are amusingly recorded in connection with a visit Smart paid to Bristol (or Bath) in 1801. He says:

Not having an admission ticket to one of the concerts, I went up into the orchestra and placed myself among the bass chorus singers. Not being known there, one of the men asked me whether I was a 'counter' or a 'starter.' Not understanding the meaning of his question, my reply was, 'I am not a counter-tenor.' 'I am aware of that,' he said, 'or you would not be sitting among the basses.' He then went on to explain that when two men sang from the same book, in order to save the trouble of both counting the rests only one of them counted the time, who was therefore called the 'counter.' When he had completed the proper number of bars' rest he gave his companion a push, and this man took up the point immediately and was therefore called the 'starter.'

These entertaining 'journals' consist of 340 pages, of which 223 are devoted to detailed accounts of three foreign journeys undertaken by Smart. Herein lies the most interesting feature of the book, especially his intercourse with Beethoven. In the year 1825 Smart enjoyed an eventful Continental holiday. He visited Weber, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn (then a boy of sixteen) in their own homes. Who does not envy him? It was on Friday, September 9, 1825, that Smart first met Beethoven. In simple, chatty language he thus describes the scene:

At twelve I took Ries to the Hotel Wildemann, the lodgings of Mr. Schlesinger, the music-seller of Paris, as I understood from Mr. Holz that Beethoven would be there, and there I found him. He received me in the most flattering manner. There was a numerous assembly of professors to hear Beethoven's second new manuscript quartette, bought by Mr. Schlesinger. This quartette is three-quarters of an hour long. They played it twice. The four performers were Schuppanzigh, Holz, Weiss, and Lincke. It is most chromatic, and there is a slow movement entitled 'Praise for the recovery of an invalid.' Beethoven intended to allude to himself, I suppose, for he was very ill during the early part of this year. He directed the performers, and took off his coat, the room being warm and crowded. A staccato passage not being expressed to the satisfaction of his eye, for alas, he could not hear, he seized Holz's violin and played the passage a quarter of a tone too flat.

No less naïvely does Smart record a visit he paid to Beethoven on September 16, 1825. The master was then living at Baden, near Vienna, and one of the Ries family was the English knight's companion on that interesting occasion.

After walking in the little park and looking at the baths we went to Beethoven's lodgings according to his invitation. These are curiously situated, a wooden circus for horsemanship has been erected in a large court before his house. He has four large-sized rooms opening into each other, furnished à la genius, in one is the grand pianoforte, much out of tune, given him by Broadwood, in which is written, besides the Latin line, the names of J. Cramer, Ferrari, and C. Knyvett. Beethoven gave me the time, by playing the subjects on the pianoforte, of many movements of his symphonies, including the Choral Symphony, which according to his account took three-quarters of an hour only in performance. The party present, namely Holz, the amateur violin; Carl Beethoven, the nephew; besides young Ries, agreed that the performance at Vienna only took that time; this I deem to be totally impossible. It seems at Vienna the Recit was played only with four 'celli and two contra bassi, which certainly is better than having the tutti bassi. . . . He told me of a mass, not yet published, which he had composed. We had a long conversation on musical subjects conducted on my part in writing. He is very desirous to come to England.

After ordering his dinner with his funny old cook and telling his nephew to see to the wine, we all five took a walk. Beethoven was generally in advance humming some passage. He usually sketches his subjects in the open air; it was on one of these occasions, Schuppanzigh told me, that he caught his deafness. He was writing in a garden and was so absorbed that he was not sensible of a pouring rain, till his music paper was so wet that he could no longer write. From that day his deafness commenced, which neither art nor time has cured.

On our return we had dinner at two o'clock. It was a most curious one and so plentiful that dishes came in as we came out, for, unfortunately, we were rather in a hurry to get to the stage coach by four, it being the only one going to Vienna that evening. I overheard Beethoven say, 'We will try how much the Englishman can drink.' He had the worst of the trial.

The victorious knight gave Beethoven his diamond pin 'as a remembrance of the high gratification I received by the honour of his invitation and kind reception.'

Sir George Smart's visit to the Mendelssohn family at Berlin, his intercourse with Weber, who died at his (Smart's) house in Great Portland Street—which has been recently demolished, by the way—and other incidents furnish much quotable matter; but enough has been said to attract readers to an interesting contribution to musical literature. The editors have done their work well, though the subject-matter might have been compressed with advantage, and the date of Mendelssohn's first appearance at the Philharmonic Society is mixed up on pages 64 and 271. An excellent index increases the value of the volume as a book of reference.

One of the best of Sir George Smart's anecdotes relates to King William IV. At the grand Musical Festival of the year 1834, held in Westminster Abbey, his Majesty dozed off during one of the performances. While the duet for bass voices from 'Israel in Egypt' was being sung, the Queen suddenly aroused her royal Consort with the remark, 'What a fine duet—The Lord is a man of war.' The sailor King, not being thoroughly awake, said, 'How many guns does she carry?'

Thirty-three years have come and gone since, on that sad February day, the mortal remains of Sir William Sterndale Bennett were laid to rest in Westminster Abbey. No undue haste, therefore, has been made in presenting the biography of one who upheld the doctrine of true art in music. son should not write the life-story of his father is a natural objection which most certainly does not apply in the present instance. With filial affection yet unswerving fidelity, Mr. J. R. Sterndale Bennett has set forth the strenuous and high-principled life of his father in a series of attractive pictures that are never overdrawn nor tinged with couleur de rose. master-musician is presented to us successively as the orphan-chorister at King's College, Cambridge, the clever boy-student at the Royal Academy of Music, the gifted composer, the friend of Mendelssohn and Schumann, and the hard-worked teacher. Also as a beautiful pianoforte player having a lovely touch, a conscientious conductor, a Cambridge Professor of Music, a Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, a lover and true disciple of Bach, and, above all, as an artist - minded man of a very lovable disposition. Such a life is not lived by every musician, and therefore we warmly welcome this admirably compiled biography, not only for its own sake but for the lessons it teaches.

Not by any means the least interesting feature of this attractive volume is the correspondence between Bennett and his friends Mendelssohn and Schumann. One of the many letters written by the former reads thus:

My dear Bennett, Shall I dine to-morrow with you and drink 10 pints of porter? Or rather not? Yours ergebenstly, FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY. London, May 17, 1844.

This amusing note written in English and Bennett's felicitous reply, are given in facsimile in the book. In his letters written to Bennett from Germany, Mendelssohn does not forget his English friends: 'If you see Mr. Attwood,' he says, 'pray remember me very kindly to him, and also my best compliments to Mr. Davison (has he received my Psalm, which I gave to Mr. Novello for him?).'

The correspondence with Schumann is no less interesting. Bennett, in December, 1850, strongly urged Schumann and his wife to visit England during the Great Exhibition year. That Schumann entertained the idea is shown in the following extract from his letter to Bennett, dated 'Düsseldorf,

January 2, 1851':

We would arrive in London in the beginning of May, and could be back again by the 1st of June. . . . The question now is, Could we in so short a time earn enough to cover the cost of journey and living, which we estimate at £100 at least? If you think so, we would wish for nothing further.

Compare this modest amount with the fee now asked by a prima-donna for one performance! Schumann continues:

Another thing I should like to mention. You will think it natural, and you also touch upon it in your letter, that I should not like to remain idle at my wife's side, but should also like to show myself as a musician, namely as a Conductor, which is my greatest desire. Now could you negotiate this, as for instance with the Philharmonic Society, so that there might be some chance of bringing it about? I have many works which I believe might find favour in England: 'Paradise and the Peri,' an Overture and incidental music to Byron's 'Manfred,' a new Symphony lately completed, and much besides, which to you above all I should have such great pleasure in showing.

The proposal, however, never came to fruition, and it was not until five years later—when Schumann was laid aside by his terrible malady—that his gifted wife came alone to England for the first time. It was then that she sang in the chorus in her husband's 'Paradise and the Peri,' at the performance of the work given at the Philharmonic concert of June 23, 1856. Five weeks later her beloved Robert died in her arms. In a letter written thirty-three years later to the author of this book, Madame Schumann said: 'I shall never forget how kind your parents both were to me when I first came to England.'

We had marked several passages to which attention should be called did space permit, were it not unfair to quote further from a book which is full of interest from cover to cover and therefore is sure to attract many readers to its pleasant pages.

There seems to be a little confusion as to the date and circumstance of the composition of the well-known Barcarolle in the Pianoforte concerto in F minor (pp. 42 and 70): and on p. 18 the year of Bennett's stage appearance as Cherubino, in Mozart's 'Figaro,' should be 1830, not 1831. But these are trifles in a biography that otherwise is spotless in the purity of its sincerity.

DARWIN AND LORD KELVIN AND MUSIC.

That music can go hand in hand with science is proved in the lives of two of the most eminent scientists of modern times—Charles Darwin, the centenary of whose birth will fall next year, and Lord Kelvin, better known as William Thomson. It is true that there was a considerable difference in the musicianship of the two men, but they both loved the art in their own particular way. Moreover, they both found scope for their love of music as undergraduates at Cambridge. In his autobiography Darwin says:

I got into a musical set [at Cambridge]. . . . From associating with these men and hearing them play, I acquired a strong taste for music, and used very often to time my walks so as to hear on week-days the anthem in King's College Chapel. This gave me intense pleasure, so that my backbone would sometimes shiver. I am sure that there was no affectation or mere imitation in this taste, for I used generally to go by myself to King's College, and I sometimes hired the chorister boys to sing in my rooms. Nevertheless I am so utterly destitute of an ear, that I cannot perceive a discord, or keep time and hum a tune correctly; and it is a mystery how I could possibly have derived pleasure from music.

He goes on to say:

My musical friends soon perceived my state, and sometimes amused themselves by making me pass an examination, which consisted in ascertaining how many tunes I could recognise when they were played rather more quickly or slowly than usual. 'God save the King,' when thus played, was a sore puzzle. There was another man with almost as bad an ear as I had, and strange to say he played a little on the flute. Once I had the triumph of beating him in one of our musical examinations.

A fellow undergraduate at Cambridge, the late Judge Herbert, says of Darwin, 'What gave him the greatest delight was some grand symphony or overture of Mozart's or Beethoven's, with their full harmonies.' On one occasion Herbert remembers 'accompanying him to the afternoon service at King's, when we heard a very beautiful anthem. At the end of one of the parts, which was exceedingly impressive, he turned round to me and said, with a deep sigh, "How's your backbone?" He often spoke in later years of a feeling of coldness or shivering in his back on hearing beautiful music.

Some interesting sidelights on the every-day life at Down during the scientist's later years, are supplied by Dr. Francis Darwin in the biography of his eminent father. Music is thus referred to:

In the evening—that is, after he had read as much as his strength would allow, and before the reading aloud began he would often lie on the sofa and listen to my mother playing the piano. He had not a good ear, yet in spite of this he had a true love of fine music. He used to lament that his enjoyment of music had become dulled with age, yet within my recollection his love of a good tune was strong. I never heard him hum more than one tune, the Welsh song 'Ar hyd y nos,' which he went through correctly; he used also, I believe, to hum a little Otaheitan song. From his From his want of ear he was unable to recognise a tune when he heard it again, but he remained constant to what he liked, and would often say, when an old favourite was played 'That's a fine thing; what is it?' He liked especially parts of a fine thing; what is it?' He liked especially parts of Beethoven's symphonies and bits of Handel. He was sensitive to differences in style, and enjoyed the late sensure to differences in style, and enjoyed the late Mrs. Vernon Lushington's playing intensely, and in June, 1881, when Hans Richter paid a visit to Down, he was roused to strong enthusiasm by his magnificent performance on the piano. He enjoyed good singing, and was moved almost to tears by grand or pathetic songs. His niece Lady Farrer's singing of Sullivan's 'Will he come' was a never failing enjoyment to him. He was humble in the never-failing enjoyment to him. He was humble in the extreme about his own taste, and correspondingly pleased when he found that others agreed with him.

In the month of April, 1844, John B. Dykes, then an undergraduate at Cambridge, wrote to his sister Lucy in the following terms:

I am bringing home a friend who plays the cornet in our band, and rejoices in the very uncommon name of Thomson. He is a great friend of mine and a very nice fellow, and, what is more, a most gentlemanly man.

This cornet-playing and 'most gentlemanly man' is now known the world over as William Thomson, Lord Kelvin. We learn from Canon Fowler's 'Life and letters of John Bacchus Dykes' that 'The friend came and delighted his hosts with his simple, goodnatured kindliness. They have a lively recollection of how he made a flying-machine with unbrella whale-bones, persuaded an egg to stand alone, and performed wonderful experiments, besides joining in the family concerts.'

A few months earlier Dykes had become a member of the Peterhouse Musical Society, in Peterhouse (now modernized into St. Peter's College). This modest Society, founded in Michaelmas Term, 1843, had as one of its original members William Thomson, and in all probability J. B. Dykes as another. The latter records in his diary, November 9, 1843, 'Went to a private meeting of the Peterhouse Musical Society. They fixed that I was to take the piano.' The first public (or semi-public) concert given by the Society took place at the Red Lion, in Petty Curry, on Friday, December 8, 1843, when the following was the programme:

		PART I.
Symphony, 1	No. 1		•	-	- Haydn
Glee	- Yel	oreezes softly l	olowing	-	 Mosart

The composer named 'Dikes' in the above programme was the young undergraduate whose hymn-tunes are so well-known. The concert is thus recorded in the Cambridge Chronicle of December 16, 1843:

PETERHOUSE MUSICAL SOCIETY.—The members of the Peterhouse Musical Society met on the evening of yesterday at the large room in the Red Lion, and gave a Concert of vocal and instrumental music to their friends. The audience and performers consisted almost exclusively of gownsmen, of whom there were between two and three hundred present. The band, eleven in number, was led by Mr. Sippel, and performed in good style Haydn's 1st Symphony, the overture to Masaniello, Strauss's Elizabethan Waltzes, and the Royal Irish Quadrilles. In addition to this there was a glee, a flute solo by S. W. King, Esq., of Catherine Hall, and two or three songs. On the whole the performance did credit to the musical taste of the University. One thing we cannot forbear mentioning, which reflects somewhat on the gallantry of the Society: not a single lady was present! Next term, however, we hope to see these feativals of Euterpe graced with the presence of the fair.

Two extracts from letters written by Dykes to one of his sisters in the year 1844 are of special interest. They speak for themselves; but it should be stated that in the spring of 1844 the name of the Peterhouse Musical Society was changed to the Cambridge University Musical Society, which still exists. Dykes writes:

I had a deputation almost as soon as I got up, to ask me to take the Presidentship of the University Musical Society, now vacant by the departure of Blow. I asked for time to think about it, and then sent and declined it, in consequence of the reading, etc. (was not this good of me!). I am very glad, however, that I did, for we have prevailed on that splendid fellow Thomson [Lord Kelvin] of Peterhouse to take it. It will be no end of a feather in our caps, to have such a man as our representative in the University.

Again:

Our Musical Society is getting on famously. Walmisley is going to join us. He says it is the most splendid affair since he came to the University.

At the first concert—May 1, Cambridge Town Hall—of the re-named Society, Mr. Dykes sang two comic songs, John Parry's 'Nice young man' and 'Berlin wool,' the latter as an encore. To think that these ditties were sung at a concert of the Cambridge University Musical Society!

In a letter written to Mrs. Cheape, the Rev. Dr.

In a letter written to Mrs. Cheape, the Rev. Dr. Dykes's sister, and printed in the 'Life of Dr. Dykes,' Lord Kelvin gave some interesting information concerning his musical life at Cambridge. The letter is dated 'The University, Glasgow, February 23, 1896, and reads as follows:

'The first President of the Peterhouse Musical Society was G. E. Smith, who remained President until his death in 1844, when it had become the C.U.M.S. He came up to Peterhouse as an undergraduate, at the same time with myself, October, 1841.

Blow, an undergraduate of a year later, succeeded him, and retired in 1845, when I became President.

Blow was a splendid violin-player, and he continued as first violin in the C.U.M.S. till 1846.

He became a clergyman, and lived to about 1874.

When I left Cambridge in 1846 to enter on my professorship here, your brother John succeeded me as President.

I still came up from Glasgow in the May term, and continued my part (as 2nd Horn) in the orchestra, till (as far as I can recollect) your brother retired in 1847 on leaving Cambridge. He was succeeded by E. W. Whinfield, of Trinity, an excellent violoncello player, of whom your brother thought very highly.

A Jubilee Commemoration of the first fifty years of the C.U.M.S. was held at Cambridge in 1893, and

I find a menu card of a dinner given on the occasion in King's College Hall on June 12th, with some pencilled notes on the back of it for a reply to the toast Prosperity to the C.U.M.S.

Founded 22 years after the birth of Der Freischütz.

16 years after the death of Beethoven. Mendels-sohn still alive.

These were our gods.

1843: G. E. Smith, Cornet, Founder, and first President.

1844-45: Blow, Violin and President.

1845-46: Thonison, 2nd Horn and President.
" Macdonnell, of Magdalene, 1st Horn and Secretary.

1846-47: Incomparable John Dykes, Musician and President.

1847: Whinfield, 'Cello and President.'

At one of the social functions which in 1893 celebrated the jubilee, Mr. Sedley Taylor said that Lord Kelvin was practically the founder of the Cambridge University Musical Society.

Continuing his letter to Mrs. Cheape, Dr. Dykes's sister, Lord Kelvin said:

'I well remember my first visit to your father's hospitable house in Wakefield, with your brother, in the Easter Vacation, 1844. I can never forget the kindness I received from all your family, including the extreme good nature of your father in giving me some instructions in the French Horn, and allowing me to play on it in his study when he was out at the Bank, and the, if possible, more extreme good nature of the rest of the family, in tolerating the noises that came from that room during many hours of each day of my visit.'

Mr. Edward O. Dykes, brother of the Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes and one of the youngest members of the family, recalls that visit of 'Mr. Thomson,' in a recent letter to the present writer. He says: 'I was the thirteenth of fourteen children; but, although it is so long ago as sixty-three years, I remember it quite well and the awful noises made when my father gave him lessons on the French horn. Also how we had to hunt through the house for old umbrellas to extract the whalebone, of which the ribs were made in those days, for the purpose of Mr. Thomson's model flying-machine; and that he succeeded in making it fly across the drawing-room, and that he was still not satisfied with it!'

Church and Organ Music.

ABIDE WITH ME.

Through the kindness of Miss Hogg, grand-daughter of the author, we are enabled to give the music composed by the Rev. H. F. Lyte to his famous evening hymn. It is printed on a four-page octavo leaflet, and entitled:

ABIDE WITH ME! Words and music by the Rev. H. F. LYTE, Late Incumbent of Lower Brixham.

Any profit from the sale of this Hymn is to be given to the Brixham Sunday Schools.

Bristol: John Wright & Co., Steam Press, Thomas Street. 1863.

The music, printed with an extra stave for the melody and first verse, appears on page 2 and the remaining verses, 2 to 8, of the hymn occupy page 3. At the word 'shadows' (in verse 8) there is a foot-note reference to 'Cant. ii., 17,' which is 'Until the day break, and the shadows flee away.' Here is the Rev. H. F. Lyte's own setting of his well-known lyric.

Sir John Goss attempted to solve the difficulty of accentuation in Lyte's hymn by the following setting, which he composed specially for the 'Hymnary':

Troyte's chant, which appeared in the earlier editions of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' as an alternative to Monk's tune, is an unsatisfactory setting. Many composers have been attracted to Lyte's words. In two instances the tunes composed by Mr. James Langran and the late Thomas Hewlett have become associated with other hymns, the latter with 'Weary of earth.' The words have been set, in semi-anthem form, by Sterndale Bennett in his 'Woman of Samaria.'

IN MEMORIAM: QUEEN VICTORIA.

The anniversary, on January 22, of the lamented death of Queen Victoria was commemorated at the Royal Mausoleum, Frogmore, by a special service at which the King and Queen, with other members of the Royal Family, were present. The following music was sung, unaccompanied, by the choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, under the direction of Sir Walter Parratt, M.V.O., Master of the Musick to the King: Hymn, 'They whose course on earth is o'er,' words by the Rev. Dr. J. M. Neale, to the tune Culbach; anthems, 'Tears, for the good and true,' words by the Bishop of Ripon, music by Sir Walter Parratt; and 'Blessed angel spirits offer praise undying,' Tchaikovsky's 'Hymn to the Trinity,' the English words adapted by Mr. W. G. Rothery, which appeared in The Musical Times of June, 1906.

THE ABBEY 'ORGAN-BLOWER.'

Mr. Charles Groves, 'organ-blower' of Westminster Abbey, has recently retired, at the age of seventy-four, from the duties which he has worthily discharged for twenty-four years. These duties have consisted in attending to the nine-horse-power gas-engine which supplies wind to the Abbey organ. This engine is placed below ground in the centre of the cloister, from the precincts of which the familiar and venerable figure of Mr. Groves will be missed during service-time. In former days the organ-blower of the Abbey occupied an important place in Coronation processions. On those occasions he was clad in a short scarlet coat, and on his left breast he wore a badge, consisting of a silver-gilt nightingale perched on a twig. At the coronation of George II.—for which Handel wrote his famous coronation anthems—a King's Scholar of Westminster School, Kingsman by name, paid tribute to the organ-blower in the following poetry:

Behold the Man in solemn state,
Whose scarlet mantle shows him great!
Of what new order can he be?
The King's first organ-blower he!
Oh! could I but thy praises sing,
First organ-blower to the King!
The masters of the tuneful trade
Must own thy necessary aid.
Thou in their harmony may'st claim
At least an equal share of fame.
Mute without thee the organ's found;
Theirs are the notes, but thine the sound.

A memorial brass to Sir Herbert Oakeley has been placed in the north-east transept of Canterbury Cathedral bearing the following inscription:

IN MEMORY OF SIR HERBERT STANLEY OAKELEY,

Knight, Mus. Doc., Born 1830, Died 1903.

Pupil of Archbishop Tait at Rugby Ward of Dean Lyall at Canterbury.

He early felt the 'sweet influences' of Church Music Many of his Compositions were first sung in this Cathedral.

- ' It is not night if Thou be near.'
- 'Comes, at last, a voice of thrilling gladness.'

One of the above compositions referred to was Oakeley's well-known quadruple chant, specially composed for the choir of Canterbury Cathedral and for Psalm 78, sung on the 15th evening of the month.

A PASTORAL ORGAN RECITAL AND CAROL CONCERT AT HEREFORD.

Dr. Sinclair gave a Pastoral organ recital, interspersed with appropriate vocal music, in Hereford Cathedral, on January 11. The following were the organ solos played on that occasion:

First Offertoire on two Christmas Themes							Guilmant.
Pastoral symphony	('Chri	stmas '	orate	orio)			Bach.
Pastorale in F							Kullak.
Pastoral symphony	(' Mes	siah ')					Handel.
Fantasia on Christn	nas car	ols					Best.
Pastorale from Sym	phony	No. 2					Widor.
Pastorale in C	• • •					Lefe	bure-Wely.
Christmas march	••		• •				Merkel.

The chief interest in the carol concert given by the Hereford choristers at the Town Hall on New Year's Day, was a new work composed specially for the occasion and dedicated to the choristers by Sir Edward Elgar. This is cast in the form of a two-part chorus (with parts for men's voices), the accompaniment being for pianoforte and two violins. The words are by Lady Elgar—who, with Sir Edward, is spending the winter in Rome—and constitute a greeting between the Tiber and the Wye. Here is the quartet of stanzas:

I.

Bowered on sloping hillsides rise In sunny glow, the purpling vine; Beneath the greyer English skies, In fair array, the red-gold apples shine.

To us in sun,
Love is but one;
Hearts beat and glow
By oak or vine,
Friends, always mine.

II.

On and on old Tiber speeds
Dark with its weight of ancient crime:
Far north, through green and quiet meads,
Flows on the Wye midst mist and silvering rime.

TTT

The pifferari come from far,
They seek the shrines, and hymn the peace
Which herald angels, 'neath the star,
Foretold to shepherds bidding strife to cease.

 $\mathbf{T}V$

Our England sleeps in shroud of snow, Bells, sadly sweet, recall life's flight, And tears, unbid, are wont to flow, As 'Noël! Noël!' sounds across the night. To you in snow, To us in sun,

To us in sun,
Love is but one;
Hearts beat and glow
By oak or vine,
Friends, always mine.

A hearty welcome is accorded to 'No. 2' of the Old Choir Boys' Magazine (York Minster), under the editorship of Mr. G. Arthur Scaife, head-master of the York Minster Choir School. The articles include 'The privileges of a Minster choir boy,' by the Rev. W. Bernard East; 'Something about organs,' by Mr. James I. Wedgwood; while Canon Julian writes on 'Sacred carols: ancient and modern,' and Mr. Arthur H. Brown continues his interesting notes on 'Monuments and monumental inscriptions.' Two of the latter may be quoted. The first, at Streatham, Surrey, and of the year 1746, reads:

Elizabeth, wife of Major-General Hamilton, who was married forty-seven years, and never did one thing to disoblige her husband.

A more recent epitaph—at Wenhaston, Suffolk, 1814—is contained in this couplet:

Life is only a pain below, When Christ appears—then up we go.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

The Festival of the Conversion of St. Paul was celebrated with its customary impressiveness. At Mattins the music included Dr. Basil Harwood's Te Deum and Benedictus in The Communion Service was Dvorák in D. accompanied by a full orchestra, while Mozart's 'Jesu, Word of God Incarnate' was sung during Communion.

At Evensong the Canticles were sung to Dr. Eaton Faning's festival setting in C—jubilant strains eminently befitting the occasion. The anthem consisted of a selection from Mendelssohn's oratorio 'St. Paul,' which, as in previous years, since 1873, was sung with full orchestral accompaniment, the Service also receiving the benefit of this efficient Sir George Martin conducted with instrumental force. complete insight into the spiritual potentialities of the music; and the organ was in the competent hands of Mr. Charles Macpherson. Large congregations were present at both

The death of the Rev. Edward Husband-on January 3, aged sixty-four-has removed a very remarkable clergyman from the scene of his earthly labours. For more than thirty years Mr. Husband had been vicar of St. Michael and All Angels' church, Folkestone, and moreover he was his own organist. A genial man of varied gifts, he instituted at his church monthly 'Sunday afternoons for the people,' of which the 250th was held last year. On those occasions he gave an organ recital and an address. The music at his church attracted many people, and he devoted much thought and energy to its rendering. Not satisfied with the orthodox type of organ, he had an instrument fitted with drums, cymbals and bells, which he himself played con amore. One of his most popular pieces was from his own pen, entitled 'The Storm,' in which he was a rival to Neukomm and Lemmens.

The death is recorded with regret of Mr. Henry Cotter Nixon, which took place at Bromley on Christmas Day. fourth son of Henry George Nixon-well known in his day as a composer—he was born on May 17, 1842, and was a grandson, on his mother's side, of John Danby, the glee composer. Mr. Nixon held various organistships, especially at Roman Catholic Churches, the last being St. Patrick's, Soho Square. In 1876 he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Music at Cambridge, and as long ago as 1867 he obtained the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists. During a residence at Hastings he did much to promote the cause of music at that watering-place, as conductor of the Hastings and St. Leonards Orchestral Society, and in other directions. His compositions include four concert overtures and other orchestral works, a Concertstück for pianoforte, chamber and pianoforte music, cantatas, church music, &c.

At the fifth annual choir festival of St. John's Church, Lower Weston, Bath, on January 6, Sullivan's 'Festival Te Deum,' preceded by the In Memoriam overture, was performed under the direction of the organist, Mr. H. F. Weight, with Mr. A. Salter at the organ and Mr. I. W. Drusses lender of the organist Parket. Mr. J. W. Duys as leader of the orchestra. Earlier in the day an organ recital was given by Mr. H. J. Davis, organist of Christ Church, Bath. The chief feature of the fourteenth annual entertainment given by the church choir was Dr. Arthur Somervell's operetta 'The enchanted palace,' performed on four successive days last month during the choir festival was 'not be a successive days last month during the choir festival week,' under Mr. H. F. Weight's careful direction.

The following is the description of a new organ, as recorded in a local newspaper, in a chapel in the West of England: 'Quartered oak case, finished front and back, its dimensions are: height, 42 inches; width, 25 inches; length, 52 inches; with 285 orchestral multitone reeds. The instrument, which cost £22, is entirely controlled by 14 stops and two knee swells.

Sir Hubert Parry's Magnificat in D has recently been sung by choir and congregation on Sunday evenings at St. Paul's Church, Princes Park, Liverpool, with encouraging success. The vicar, Rev. J. Gough McCormick, is responsible for the experiment, which is intended to stimulate and improve the congregational interest in and singing of Church music of the best type, and the vicar's initiative and enthusiasm have been attended with good results. Several congregational rehearsals of the Magnificat, which is on broad, dignified lines, have been personally conducted by Mr. McCormick, who provided 1,000 copies of the service for the use of the adult members of the evening congregation.

At the dedication festival service in connection with the thirty-seventh anniversary of All Saints' Church, Petersham, the music included Mr. John E. West's festival setting (in A) of the evening canticles and two anthems—'I was glad' (Elvey) and 'The Lord is in His holy temple' (Gordon Saunders). These compositions and the whole of the service music were excellently rendered by an augmented choir of 100 voices, which had been admirably trained by Mr. William T. Wood, choirmaster of the church. Mr. C. R. Evans, organist of the church, ably presided at the organ.

Mr. E. Stanley Jones, of Cardiff, has issued a second edition of his useful pamphlet 'Hints to candidates for the examinations of the Royal College of Organists.'

Reviews.

The Letters of Robert Schumann. Selected and edited by Dr. Karl Storck. Translated by Hannah Bryant.

[John Murray.]

Nothing is more biographically valuable about a really great man than the letters he wrote, especially if they be interesting, and if the writer, as in the case of Robert Schumann, be gifted with literary grace. The letters which Dr. Storck gifted with literary grace. The letters which Dr. Storck has so admirably selected cover a period of a quarter of a century, the first having been penned when the writer was seventeen years of age, the last (to Brahms) when he was forty-four. These communications are as windows through which we can look into the life of this poetic-minded musician at the different stages of its development, and in looking we can appreciate its joys and sorrows, its aspirations and disappointments. Breathing the spirit of exquisite tenderness are the letters addressed to his beloved Clara, first as his true-hearted fiancée, and afterwards as his devoted and heroic wife. No less beautiful are the letters from Clara to her much loved Robert. Mendelssohn, Joachim, and Brahms are a distinguished trio who find a place in this fascinating correspondence. To Mendelssohn, Schumann

Clara told me with genuine pleasure how good and kind you had been. You know she is an old admirer of yours, and is happy at your least sign of approval. For her untiring zeal and energy in her art she really deserves everyone's love and encouragement; then, as a woman, she is indeed a gift from heaven.

He then goes on to refer to Mendelssohn's Organ sonatas, and says:

Each Sonata is rounded off to a complete picture. Bach's music gives me the impression of himself seated at the organ, but yours brings me a vision of a Cecilia fingering the keys. How charming that that should be your wife's name, too! . . . One thing is certain, dear Mendelssohn, no one but you writes harmonies so pure, harmonies ever-increasing in purity and spiritual beauty.

To Joachim he writes:

The cigars suit me admirably. They have a Brahmsian flavour, which is strong, as usual, but agreeable. I can see a smile steal over his face!

And to Brahms, not so very long before his (Schumann's) death, under date 'Endenich, November 27, 1854':

How I long to see you, dear friend, and hear your lovely Variations [Op. 9] played either by you or by Clara, of whose beautiful rendering Joachim told me in his letter. There is an exquisite coherence about the whole work, a wealth of fantastic glamour peculiarly your own, and, moreover, evidence of what is to me a new development on your part. I mean the profound skill with which you introduce the theme at odd moments, mysteriously, passionately, and again let it disappear completely. Then the wonderful close to the 14th variation, with its ingenious imitation in the second above; the 15th, in G flat, with its glorious second part; and the last!

These extracts suffice to sample the contents of this readable and valuable book that should find its way into the hands and minds of true lovers of music, young and old alike; it is a well-spring of delight from which all may draw to the advantage of their artistic well-being and pleasure. This well-got up volume is enriched with beautifully reproduced portraits of Robert and Clara Schumann, the latter at the the effects will justify the means employed. age of twenty-three.

PART-SONGS FOR MEN'S VOICES.

My heart's dearest. Oh, proud and haughty maiden. The merry frogs. The handy man. Words by W. G. Rothery. Music by Wilhelm Speiser.

A spring shower. The Linden blossom. Words by W. G. Rothery, music by Willy von Moellendorff.

It is the miller's daughter. Words by Tennyson. Music by Frederick A. J. Hervey.

The midnight guard. Words by W. G. Rothery. Music by A. E. M. Grétry. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Speiser writes genially for the voice and avoids what are commonly called 'crabbed' passages. 'My heart's dearest' is a lively love lyric of folk-song character, one that pleases by its unaffected sincerity. 'Oh, proud and haughty pleases by its unaffected sincerity.

On, prous and madern maiden is an amusing ditty, the text suggesting a modern for and the grapes. The merry rogs' is of a more broadly comic nature, and is a satire on incompetent teachers of voice-production. 'The handy incompetent teachers of voice-production. man' will be found less easy to sing than the preceding part-songs, but it is a merry strain that will repay the extra careful rehearsal demanded for its effective interpretation.

In Mr. von Moellendorff's 'A spring shower' an attempt is made to suggest rainfall by the second tenors and first and second basses repeating rapidly, to a musical figure, the words 'pit patter,' until one is reminded of the piper who picked a peck of pepper. Above this accompaniment the first tenors sing the text to melodious phrases. The close, Molto più lento, in six parts, forms an effective contrast to the preceding vivacity. The part-song will require diligent practice to secure the necessary lightness and crispness of attack, but if it is well rendered it will delight its audience. 'The Linden blossom' might be called a song of consolation, for the text bids a saddened spirit 'to greet with rapture Sweet Mary's enchanting night.' The music is appropriately smooth and tender in character, and richly harmonised.

Canon Hervey has written unpretentious music to Lord Tennyson's familiar lines, but the strains admirably echo the sentiment of the words.

'The midnight guard' is a vocal march which, beginning pianissimo, works up to a forte climax followed by a diminuendo as the patrol passes into the distance—always an effective form.

ifty years' experience of Pianoforte teaching and playing. By Oscar Beringer. [Bosworth & Co.] Fifty

There is a jubilant ring about these jubilee reminiscences which causes Mr. Oscar Beringer's pages to be anything but dull. From the time he gave his first pianoforte lesson for the fee of 1s. 3d. (the mother of the pupil had beaten him down to that sum from the eighteen pence he, in the good opinion of himself, had ventured to ask) down to the present time, he chais most pleasantly of men and things that have come under his ken during his long and successful professional life. The book can be heartily recommended as one that will afford both amusement and profit as a pleasant fireside companion.

In view of a second edition, we venture to point out one or two slips of the pen. It was Alexander Billet, not Madame Arabella Goddard, who first played Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in B flat (Op. 106), in England (p. 17); Joachim made his first appearance in England in 1844, not 1842; Mendelssohn died in 1847, not 1846 (both these slips are on p. 62); while in several places Davison is spelt Davidson, a common error. Portraits of Mr. Beringer and other musical notabilities add to the attractiveness of an acceptable brochure.

Te Deum and Benedictus, in E flat. By Charles Macpherson. Te Deum, Jubilate, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, in E flat. By H. Elliot Button.

Te Deum, Magnificat, Nunc dimittis, Jubilate, and Sanctus, in D. By T. S. Dupuis. Edited by John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

A well-trained and numerous choir is necessary in order to do justice to Mr. Charles Macpherson's Morning Service. Given these conditions, however, and an artistic organist, The Te Deum contains passages in unison for the sopranos, tenors and basses, and variety and contrast have been secured by this disposition of the voices no less than by harmonic means. The same style is maintained in the Benedictus, but in this there are two short solos for a soprano voice.

Mr. Elliot Button makes considerable use of voices in unison in his settings of the Canticles, but he intersperses passages in diatonic harmony with excellent results. A bright spirit animates the music allied to the Te Deum and Jubilate. The vocal writing is in four parts throughout, so, too, is the music for the Magnificat, but the Nunc dimittis opens with a passage for tenors or baritones in unison. While the organ accompaniment possesses some independence, it effectively supports the voices.

Of the service by Dr. Dupuis the Te Deum in particular is strong and typical English sacred music. So, too, is the Jubilate, conceived in the same bold but essentially reverent vein. The vocal part-writing is throughout for the usual four voices, which the organ accompaniment doubles. In this edition Mr. West has corrected several errors in the original parts.

NEW PART-SONGS.

Love. Words by Arthur Maquarie. Elgar (Op. 18, No. 2). Fain would I change that note. Music by Edward Words anonymous. Music by Ralph Vaughan Williams.

We must not part as others do. Words Early 17th century.
Music by Healey Willan.

A Lament. Words by Shelley. Music by John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

It is sometimes said that modern composers have lost the art of writing simply, but Sir Edward Elgar's setting of Mr. Maquarie's dainty little poem controverts that statement, for the music flows on in as clear and melodious a course as do the lines. Although easy to read and to sing, the part-song requires refined and finished treatment and, given these requisites, 'Love' will be found wholly charming.

Love is also the burden of the song by Dr. Vaughan Williams. The anonymous poet says 'O Love, they wrong thee much, that say thy sweet is bitter,' and the composer has evidently sought to make amends for the libel, with a result that will assuredly be declared satisfactory by those who sing this dainty ditty.

'We must not part as others do' presents another view of the tender passion, that of constancy. Faithfulness implies a good deal, and Mr. Healey Willan seems to have recognized this when writing his part-song. It commences Lento con molto espressione with a simple diatonic tune in the key of E major, the music soon changes to E minor and becomes chromatic, while the part-writing grows more independent and, be it added, interesting. The declaration that 'True love has wings' is set in the key of C, Andante maestoso, and when the first theme returns, it is accompanied by flowing counterpoint which prevails until an effective climax is reached ff in a false cadence, which is immediately followed by a most impressive Coda of three bars, sung pianissimo and adagio.

Shelley's pessimistic lines commencing 'O World! O Life! O Time!' are allied to music of genuine pathon by O Time!' are allied to music of genuine pathos by Mr. John E. West. A well-trained choir could easily make this part-song impressive, and it would certainly interest the singers.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH.

SIR,—You quoted last month some wild remarks of Dr. Walker's concerning Handel's oratorios being 'in some danger of being relegated to the rubbish-heap.' The assertion is completely false; for Handel's works, secular and sacred, are more performed in Germany than ever, apart from their established position in England. It may be worth while to give the judgment concerning Handel and

Bach, pronounced by no less an authority than Spitta. In his 'Life of Bach' (English edition III. 63), Spitta writes:

'Though all of Bach's compositions might be lost, still the B minor Mass, even to the remotest future, would bear witness to the artist's greatness with the weight of a divine revelation. There is only one other work that can really be set by the side of it. Handel's "Messiah" has often been compared to Bach's St. Matthew Passion, but this must inevitably lead to an unfair judgment of both these works, which, in reality, have hardly anything in common. The real companion work to the "Messiah" can only be the B minor Mass. The aim fulfilled by both works is the artistic presentment of the essence of Christianity. But the two men apprehended the subject differently; Handel viewed it from the independent and historical standpoint, Bach from the more limited doctrinal side. Though the latter was beyond a doubt the most suggestive as regards the depth of the world of feeling to be expressed, still the former afforded an opening for a more intelligible dramatic treatment, which is no less pure in art. As all the musical inspiration of that period was embodied in these two equally sound and gifted artists, and consequently each can only be perfectly understood through the other, in any honest historical review we must refrain from elevating one at the expense of the other. But the German nation may rejoice in boasting that both these incomparable geniuses were her sons.' (The italics are mine.)

Dr. Walker may profitably meditate on this passage, which may serve to comfort any Handel-lovers who may have been daunted by his attacks on the old master. We have indeed progressed far since Hullah wrote, in his two histories of music, concerning Handel and Bach, but there is still no danger of Handel's works being neglected.

Yours, &c., A LOVER OF ALL GOOD MUSIC.

The sad and distressing illness from which Dr. Edward MacDowell had suffered for some months past was mercifully relieved by death at New York on January 24. A biographical sketch, with special portrait, of Dr. MacDowell, one of the most distinguished of American composers, appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1904.

Mr. Thomas Dunhill announces a second series of Chamber Concerts, to be held at Steinway Hall on the first three Friday evenings in February. The special feature of these concerts will be the performance of works by British composers which have been previously given with success; at the same time each programme will contain certain standard compositions of acknowledged excellence. Two lady composers will be represented in the scheme in a Quartetfantasie for pianoforte and strings by Miss Alice Bredt-Verne and a Pianoforte quintet by Miss Katharine Eggar.

THE LIMITS OF ARTISTIC EXPRESSION IN MUSIC.

Dr. Ralph H. Bellairs read an interesting and thoughtful paper on the above subject before the Musical Association on January 21: Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, honorary treasurer of the Association, in the chair, it is not easy to convey the import of such a discourse in a brief report, but the following summary has been kindly furnished by the lecturer.

The question of such limits is the most important in

The question of such limits is the most important in musical asthetics; particularly so to-day, when the air is alive with unbridled freedom of experiment. The outstanding feature in contemporary music is the effort to make it what it cannot be, a means of explicit delineation of the concrete in daily life. The tangible result of such misconception is the 'tone-poem' of Richard Strauss and his disciples, which attempts the impossible task of dispensing with actors and text, and fails accordingly.

An examination of the musical creed of Richard Strauss as given in Professor Niecks's 'Programme Music': its numerous fallacies—the problem of 'extension of content' in recent music—influence of destructive criticism on the artist's outlook on life. Is music subject to the law of Aūξησις καὶ φθισις formulated by the old Greek philosophers? Undoubtedly so, if it is only to be the reflection of mere vital processes. The conditions to limit of artistic expression. In the highest 'plane' of musical expression there is perfect restraint of both idea and idiom. Self-abnegation is the true self-realization, as illustrated in only the greatest music. The analysis of 'sentimentality' in relation to music, including much religious music, as exemplified in its actual technique, slow appoggiatura, stagnant basses, and indolent rhythms: it is the perfect expression of that 'hedonism' which history reveals to be the ultimate fate of civilized nations. In regard to the painful question of neurosis in relation to music and reaction, the latter is often more akin to anarchy than to genuine progress. Finally, the more obvious limits to artistic expression relate to realistic imitation (which is ridiculous), untrammelled emotion and 'freakishness,' or deliberate eccentricity.

From all such phases the true artist for ever holds aloof absolutely. When one surveys much contemporary music so-called, even from the broadest point of view one is forced to say with Horace:

Nil admirari prope res est una, Numici, Solaque quae possit facere et servare beatum.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The twenty-third annual Conference was held at Harrogate from December 31 to January 3, with the customary success. As on previous occasions the social element contributed not a little to the enjoyment of the meeting, and the various amusements, excursions, &c., formed a pleasant relief to the more serious part of the proceedings.

The Conference opened with a special service held at St. Peter's Church, at which was sung a Festival Te Deum, composed specially for the occasion by Dr. E. J. Crow, who died immediately after he had completed the work. As sermon was preached by the Bishop of Knaresborough, and Mr. J. Bullein appraise of the church precided of the appraise.

sermon was preached by the Bishop of Kharesborough, and Mr. J. Pullein, organist of the church, presided at the organ. Four papers were read on the following subjects: 'The training of music teachers,' by Dr. Walter Carroll: 'Hugo Wolf and his songs' (musically illustrated), by Mr. T. J. Hoggett; 'A stocktaking of English music,' by Dr. F. J. Sawyer; and 'Municipal music and its possibilities,' by Mr. H. A. Fricker. A mere resume of this quartet of discourses would do scant justice to their merits, and would be unfair to their authors. The papers and the discussions they evoked are printed verbatim in the special Conference number of the Journal of the Society, which also contains a full and graphic account of the entire proceedings.

A special feature of the Conference was an orchestral concert held at the Kursaal, Harrogate, on January 2. This enjoyable music-making had been specially arranged for the production of original orchestral works composed by members of the Society. The programme was as follows:

God Save the King.

Symphonic Poem .. Alastor J. Weston Nicholl. The dying swan (founded on Tennyson's poem)

J. Carlowitz Ames. Tone-poem Miss Lillie Wormald. Meditation A woodland idyll .. W. Il'olstenholme. Two Movements from 'Neath Tuscan skies .. H. F. Geehl. (1) Sarabande (2) Valse lente (3) Gavotte (4) Minuet H. A. Keyser. Dance Suite Variations on a Sarabande by G. F. Handel (Op. 40) ... J. Lyon.

The above selection was excellently performed by the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, under the inspiring direction of their conductor, Mr. Allen Gill, and the two songs were well rendered by Miss Lillie Wormald. At a concert of chamber music, held in the great hall of the Hotel Majestic (the rendezvous of the Conference), the programme included a String quartet in D minor (Op. 11), by Mr. A. E. Grimshaw, and a Sonata for violin and pianoforte in E minor (Op. 49), composed by Dr. Esposito, which gained the prize offered by the Société Musicale, Paris, in 1907. In the performance of the sonata the composer (at the pianoforte) was associated with M. Sigmund Beel.

A specially interesting feature of the Conference was the presentation to Mr. Edward Chadfield, the late secretary, of his portrait, painted by Mr. E. Bent Walker. Unfortunately Mr. Chadfield was too ill to be present, but a letter of thanks from him was read by Dr. Sawyer. In this the veteran musician recounted some of the incidents of his secretaryship, the duties of which he had so efficiently and faithfully discharged for twenty-two years. Mr. Edward Chadfield is succeeded in the office of secretary to the Society by his son, Mr. Hugo Chadfield.

The Conference of 1909 will be held in London, where the first meeting took place in 1886.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH ON NEW YEAR'S DAY.

The 'superior person' who thinks that Handel 'is in some danger of being relegated to the rubbish-heap' should have been at the Royal Albert Hall on the evening of New Year's Day. He would have beheld the huge building crowded with an audience, gathered from near and far, who listened to the familiar strains of the 'sacred oratorio' with the keenest enjoyment. If a vote could have been taken of those present on that occasion as to the reasonableness of the 'rubbish-heap' opinion, the result could have been summarised in one word, 'rubbish!'

For many years the hall has been sold out at this New Year's performance of Handel's masterpiece, and January 1, 1908, fully maintained the tradition. The work was performed by the Royal Choral Society without Mozart's additional accompaniments, to the great advantage of the music. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Watkin Mills were the soloists, and the choruses were sung with evident enjoyment under Sir Frederick Bridge's enthusiastic conductorship. Age cannot wither, nor custom stale this time-honoured oratorio, for it is far too deeply rooted in the affections of the people.

We regret to record, as we go to press, the death of Herr August Wilhelmj, which occurred at his residence, 54, Priory Road, West Hampstead, on January 22, in his sixty-third year. A biographical sketch of him, with special supplement portrait, appeared in The Musical Times of June, 1901. It is satisfactory to learn that the Violin School, with which Herr Wilhelmj was associated with Mr. James Brown, had been completed before the death of the eminent violonist and skilful teacher of the instrument.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

A performance of Verdi's opera 'Falstaff' was given at His Majesty's Theatre on January 21. It is regrettable that the operatic public of this country has never taken to this work, although connoisseurs consider it to be one of the masterpieces of its composer. It has been left for the Royal Academy and the Royal College to provide musicians with a chance of hearing the opera. The performance on this occasion was an artistic success that bore witness to our national executive capacity. The chief honours were carried off by Miss Alice Moffat, who sang and acted vivaciously as Mistress Ford. We may hope for a brilliant future for this young artist. Mr. Arthur Wynn was a humorous Falstaff, Mr. Robert Chignell worked hard as Ford, Miss Frances Ireland was a roguish Dame Quickly, and Miss Gladys M. Honey was an agreeable Anne. The difficult ensemble sections were given with great effect.

Quickly, and Miss Gladys M. Honey was an agreeable Anne.
The difficult ensemble sections were given with great effect.
The orchestra was excellent both in constitution and ability. Sir Charles Stanford conducted, and the stage management was under the capable charge of Mr. Richard Temple. For many reasons it is a matter for regret that all this skill and trouble should be expended over only one performance.

'APOLLO AND THE SEAMAN.'

What was variously described as 'an illuminated symphony' and as 'a dramatic symphony with choral epilogue' was performed at the Queen's Hall on January 20. The event was anticipated with great interest, because of the novel conditions under which the joint work of poet and musician was to be performed. The poem with which the music is associated is by Mr. Herbert Trench, and is entitled 'Apollo and the Seaman.' It is a work of great merit, albeit by no means easy to follow without much brooding. Its subject-matter deals in parables with the loss of the ship Immortality, and its philosophy affords cold comfort as to the destiny of the individual man and the race. But there is a ray of hope in the thought that after all what has been once may be again. If Apollo could destroy that which he had designed and built, he may yet again create. The ideas of the poem, many of which are of undoubted beauty, are unfolded in the form of an interview between Apollo and a Seaman.

The novelty of the mode of presentation was that the hall was darkened-save for the brilliant exit notices and some stray light from the orchestra. A large screen, festooned at the sides, hid the performers partially and the conductor completely. Then in instalments the words of the poem were thrown in dazzling white letters on a black ground. Meanwhile for an hour or more a stream of music flowed from the partly-visible orchestra. The music was by Mr. Joseph Holbrooke, and it aptly displayed the characteristics of his style-independence, remarkable fluency, occasional striking power and dubious congruity. The unquestioned implication of the idea of placing the poem stanza by stanza before the audience simultaneously with the music, was that the music would enforce the varying underlying moods of the poem. That Mr. Holbrooke sometimes succeeded in thus welding idea and sound is gratefully conceded, but in other passages the divorce seemed so singularly complete as to induce a belief that the lantern-slides had gone astray. No doubt it is a gain to the symphonist to escape from the fetters of the rhythms forged by syllabic accents, and to be free to employ every conception and colour that the called-for expression induces. This being so, it does not seem clear why it was decided to set the words of the epilogue to actual vocal music; the result was rather an anti-climax. In this connection it is only fair at once to say that the male-voice choir of about 150 singers had been gathered together only four days before the performance, the previous arrangements for a choir having regrettably fallen through. Honour is due to Mr. Allen Gill and the members of his Alexandra Palace Choir for the generous aid they afforded at the last moment.

On the whole, it may be said that the experiment, with all its deficient results, favoured a belief that, with greater experience, combined poetry and music may be impressively produced in a darkened auditorium. But the poem must be either easy to comprehend or be well known, and the music must be always deepening the meaning of the text.

Besides the above work a setting by Mr. W. H. Bell of another poem, 'The Shepherd,' also by Mr. Trench, was performed, but without the words being displayed. We were left therefore to judge the composition as abstract music, and as such it is gratifying to be able to say that many beautiful ideas, charmingly orchestrated, were revealed. Mr. Bell conducted his own work and was heartily recalled. Another item was a song, again written by Mr. Trench and composed by Mr. Holbrooke, sung by Miss Ada Forrest.

Mr. Holbrooke's complex symphony was conducted with much skill by Mr. Thomas Beecham. The New Symphony Orchestra, which is one of the latest and best of Metropolitan musical organizations, showed its first-rate capacity on this occasion. A repetition of the performance was announced to take place on January 27.

MR. DELIUS'S 'DANCE OF LIFE.'

At the concert of the London Symphony Orchestra given at the Royal Albert Hall on January 19, was performed a symphonic poem by Mr. Frederick Delius entitled 'A dance of Life.' The title 'Life's dance,' written on the autograph score, more truly suggests, however, the true character of the piece, the aim of the composer evidently being to depict some of the vicissitudes common to earthly existence. The work would appear to be a revised version of a symphonic poem called 'The dance goes on,' which was performed at a concert of Mr. Delius's works at the old St. James's Hall on May 30, 1899. Whether this be so on not, the composition heard at the Albert Hall is strong and significant music that attests to exceptional talent. It is laid out for a very large orchestra, and the part-writing is most complex. The two principal subjects are a dance motive, and a love theme which exerts great influence. The episodical matter is rationally introduced, and although the dissonances are at times extreme, a masterful purpose is always felt. The work was remarkably well rendered under the skilful direction of Mr. Arbos.

ENGLISH OPERA.

A brief season of opera in English was given by the Carl Rosa Company, in conjunction with Mr. Frank Rendle, at Covent Garden, from December 26 to January 11. The performances were remarkable for an excellence of ensemble that gave them artistic distinction, but the attendances in point of numbers were disappointing.

One of the most interesting events of the season was the revival, on January 3, of Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda,' originally produced by the late Carl Rosa at Drury Lane Theatre on Easter Monday (March 26), 1883. The melodic charm and grace of the music, combined with the interest of the libretto,—based on Victor Hugo's well-known novel—must have caused some of the audience to wonder why the opera has been so long neglected. The name-part was vivaciously played by Miss Elizabeth Burgess; Mr. W. Wheatley sang pleasingly as the amorous and faithful Captain of the Guard, Mr. Arthur Winckworth avoided excess of melodramatic wickedness as the infatuated Priest, and Mr. Charles Victor sang well as the Hunchback. The other parts were adequately sustained, and the freshness of tone and intelligence of the choristers went far to secure the success achieved. Mr. Eugene Goossens conducted.

Two other performances are worthy of notice—Mozart's 'Marriage of Figaro' and Nicolai's 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' given respectively on January I and 2. In the former work Madame Lucile Hill appeared as the Duchess, Miss Burgess as Suzanna, and Miss Doris Woodall gave a particularly captivating embodiment of Cherubino. The important Figaro was vivaciously personated by Mr. Charles Victor, and other parts were efficiently sustained by Messrs. Winckworth, Clendon and Felton. Equally praiseworthy was the interpretation on the succeeding evening of Nicolai's 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' in which Mr. Winckworth gave a humorous reading of Sir John Falstaff, the Misses Burgess, Woodall and Ina Hill severally provided captivating presentations of Mistress Ford, Mistress Page and 'Sweet Anne Page,' and Messrs. Clendon, Victor, Arthur Hyde and Alec Richard respectively appeared as Page, Ford, Slender and Dr. Caius. Miss Ina Hill, a student of the Royal College, was particularly successful as Marguerite in 'Faust,' and Miss Woodall gave an admirable reading of Carmen, the hero in both these operas being pleasingly impersonated by Mr. Edward Davies. The other works mounted were 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and 'Pagliacci.' An excellent orchestra was provided, and the duties of conductorship were shared by Mr. Eugene Goossens and Mr. Walter van Noorden.

MUSIC IN BETHNAL GREEN.

The Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association gave an excellent performance of Haydn's 'Creation' at Excelsion Hall, Bethnal Green, on Saturday evening, January 18. This Association was formed in 1898 with the object of providing really good concerts for the people of East London. During the intervening ten years that the work has been carried on, many of the best-known oratorios and other works have been performed by the Association's excellent choir and orchestra. The choir, which numbers about 200 voices and is composed entirely of residents in the neighbourhood, is trained by the Association's conductor, Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, and the performance furnished every proof of the really admirable results that can be accomplished by such a capable body of vocalists. As an instance of this, the beautiful opening chorus 'And the Spirit of God' was sung with rare delicacy of feeling and expression, and in all the choruses the crispness of attack and clear enunciation of the words were among the chief features of a noteworthy performance. The orchestra also ably of a noteworthy performance. The orchestra also ably seconded the efforts of the choir in promoting the success of the evening, and the solos were well sung by Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Frederick Ranalow. For several seasons the Society has performed the incidental music to Mr. Charles Fry's Shakespearean costume recitals, including Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' and Sullivan's 'Henry VIII.' and 'Merchant of Venice.' Further reference to the Society's work is made on p. 91.

London Concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

No novelties were presented at either of the concerts given on January 1 and 18, at Queen's Hall, by the orchestra over which Mr. Henry J. Wood presides. On the former occasion Mr. Hollman was heard in Saint-Saëns's Violoncello concerto in A minor. At the latter concert Miss Marie Hall made her re-appearance in London after her recent transatlantic tour. She selected Joachim's little-known Violin concerto in G major. Written soon after the death of this composer's friend, Madame Gisela von Grimm, the work has for its principal theme of the slow movement the melody of a song composed by the lady's mother, Madame Brentano. Miss Hall played with great facility and refinement, and was recalled several times to the platform. The orchestral selection consisted of Mozart's 'Haffner' symphony in D (Köchel 385), Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, and the 'Ride of the Valkyries.'

The Kruse Quartet opened its fourth chamber concert at Bechstein Hall on January 11 with Mr. Donald F. Tovey's 'Aria con variazioni.' The programme included Schubert's Quintet in C (Op. 163) and Dvorák's Pianoforte quintet in A (Op. 81), the pianist in the last-named being Mr. Sobrino. Pleasing variety was given by the tasteful singing of Madame Sobrino. Mr. Johann Kruse gave a violin recital in the same Hall on January 15, when he afforded proof of his musicianship in a classical selection that included Tartini's Sonata in G minor, Bach's Chaconne, and Vieuxtemps's fourth Concerto.

Mr. Theodore Spiering, at his recital at Æolian Hall on January 15, played a melodious and admirably written Sonata by Mr. Theodore Holland for violin and pianoforte. Of the three movements, severally headed Allegro vigoroso, Andante cantabile and Allegro con brio, the first is the strongest, but the second is an expressive meditation, and the third is manly music. Subsequently the first performance in this country was given of a 'Fantasiestück' by Mr. Hugo Kaun, which seemed to be designed principally to show advantageously the technical skill of its exponent. Mr. Spiering's interpretations were distinguished by musicianly instinct and executive command. The pianist was Mr. Charlton Keith.

The concertina is not regarded with absolute favour by the majority of musicians, but if any such went to scoff, on January 16, at Steinway Hall, it may confidently be said that they remained to admire, for the playing by Miss Christine Hawkes on this instrument is of the most charming nature. This lady of course uses the English form of the instrument—that invented by Sir Charles Wheatstone and made famous by Regondi, Case and Richard Blagrove, and written for by Molique, Sir George Macfarren and other composers. In the hands of Miss Hawkes the instrument gives a mellow tone of considerable variety of timbre and subtle gradation of force that comprises a pianissimo of fascinating purity and ethereal delicacy. All violin music can be played on it without special adaptation, and the tone-quality assimilates well with the strings. The charm of Miss Hawkes's interpretations lies in her clearness of phrasing, subtleties of accentuation and varieties of tone-colour that reveal the artist. Her rendering of a number of familiar pieces, which were sympathetically accompanied by Mr. Charlton Keith, was listened to with rapt attention.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On December 29, the Midland Gleemen, formerly known as Mr. William Sewell's Male-voice Choir, gave a concert in the Town Hall, the programme including several unaccompanied part-songs in which the gleemen excelled, especially in the refined singing of Mendelssohn's 'The Foundation Day,' Dudley Buck's 'In Absence,' Laurent de Rillé's 'Destruction of Gaza,' and Maunder's 'Song of the Northmen.' Mr. William Sewell, who conducted, had shown careful preparation in the training of the choir which is admirably constituted and balanced. The Oratory Quartet, members of the choir, gave an artistic rendering of 'Sweet and low,' and songs were given by Miss Chatterley Ingram, Mr. John Moore, Mr. F. Thompson and Mr. James Round.

The Birmingham Philharmonic Choir's annual concert

The Birmingham Philharmonic Choir's annual concert took place in the Town Hall on January 4, under Mr. H. W. Graham's conductorship. It is strictly an amateur organization composed of about seventy mixed voices of sonorous timbre, who achieved success in Beale's part-song 'Come, let us join the roundelay,' Callcott's 'In the lonely vale of streams,' and the same composer's 'Message.' Only a fair rendering was given of Dudley Buck's choral ode 'A hymn to music,' and the extraordinary medley a 'Choral fantasia' on 'Tannhauser' proved a poor effort indeed. A London soprano, Miss Radburn, gifted with a light but sweet voice, sang with much brilliance, and Mr. Frank Mullings, our local popular tenor, gave a most expressive and truly artistic rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Onaway, awake' and a dramatic interpretation of Weber's 'Oh 'tis a glorious sight.' The talented English pianish Mr. Arthur Cooke, was the recipient of quite an ovation after his magnificent performance of Liszt's sixth Hungarian Rhapsody and pieces for the left-hand only.

Some years ago we had in Birmingham an important Madrigal Society of something like a hundred and more voices, conducted by Mr. Stockley, afterwards by Mr. George Halford, but gradually it fell into decay, until Mr. Fred W. Beard came forward and established a select madrigal choir which promised to become an important organization, but on leaving the city for Australia two years ago it again threatened to become extinct. Fortunately Mr. E. Stephenson, organist and choirmaster of Birmingham Cathedral, came to the rescue and undertook the training and conductorship of the choir, which now figures as the Birmingham Madrigal Society.' He gave his first concert with the newly organized choir a year ago, and on January 7 the second concert was given in the Town Hall before a fairly large audience. The voices have been carefully selected, but numerically the choir still needs strengthening. The soprani and contralti blend wonderfully well and are of an excellent timbre, but the tenori and bassi somewhat overweigh the female voices, especially in the forte passages. In ensemble, clear articulation and gradation of light and shade remarkable advance was shown from the previous concert. The greatest success was achieved with Brahms's 'O lovely May,' 'Nightwatch,' and 'Farewell.' John Benet, Palestrina, Purcell, Elgar, Holbrooke, Stanford, Tchaikovsky, Morley, Williams, Thomas Tomkins, T. Attwood Walmisley and Benedict were also represented. Songs and duets were rendered by Miss Lucie Rosenberg, Mr. William Blackburn and Mr. Frederic Earp.

An interesting experiment in old English music was successfully tried by the Sutton Coldfield Choral Society on January 9, at the Sutton Coldfield Town Hall. The conductor of the Society, Mr. Joseph H. Adams, spoke a few words by way of introduction as the several items in the programme were submitted. The opening piece dated from the 13th century, 'Sumer is i cumen in.' The madrigals included 'Matona, lovely maiden,' 'I saw lovely Phillis,' and 'Sing we and chaunt it,' also several rounds and old catches. The choir realized an excellent tone and sang with intelligence.

An excellent all-round performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's opera 'The Gondoliers' was given on January 13 and the following four nights, at the large Lecture Theatre in connection with the Midland Institute Annual Conversazione, the executive being the Birmingham Amateur Opera Society, so ably schooled and conducted by Mr. E. W. Priestley. The occasion was a memorable one inasmuch as on January 13 the Society reached its hundredth performance, having been established in 1886. Orchestra, chorus and principals quite surpassed all their previous efforts.

After an absence of some years the Carl Rosa Opera Company paid a visit to Birmingham and gave a week's operatic season at the Bordesley Palace Theatre from January 13 to 18. The repertory included a revival of Goring Thomas's opera 'Esmeralda,' which had not been represented here for nearly twenty years. The visit proved an enormous success, the house being crowded nightly.

The annual Boxing-day performance of the 'Messiah,' by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Sinclair, attracted the usual large and enthusiastic audience to the Town Hall.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The annual Ladies' Night of the Bristol Madrigal Society on January 9 was largely attended. As usual, under Mr. D. W. Rootham's direction, an interesting programme was done justice to by the well-equipped choir. On this occasion an alteration was made in the arrangements, a lady and gentleman soloist being engaged. These special vocalists were Madame Eleanor Jones-Hudson and Mr. Spencer Thomas, care being taken in regard to their songs that they should harmonize with the choral scheme. The strength of the choir was 109 voices. Among pieces rendered which had not before been given by the Society was Anerio's 'Ah, me!' Light and graceful in style, it obtained appropriate delicacy of treatment. A madrigal by Wilbye, 'Ye that do live,' though written long ago, had never before, it is believed, been heard in public. It has recently been published by Messrs. Novello, and the Education Committee of Somerset have chosen it as the test-piece in their schools. Mr. Pinney, a Somerset gentleman and a prominent member of the Society, presented the copies at the concert. The remaining pieces included Mr. Cyril Rootham's 'Sweet echo,' a setting of lines from Milton's 'Cowen), ar Mr. Robert 'Comus.' The composer is a son of the conductor of the Society, and his clever composition, which obtained the London Madrigal Society's prize, so gained the approval of the audience that it was repeated. As usual, compositions by Pearsall were inserted in the programme, those chosen on this occasion being 'Allen-a-dale' and 'Sir Patrick Spens,' the latter sung at the instance of Mr E. E. Cooper and Mr. Cole, of the London Madrigal Society, who were present at the concert.

The Shirehampton and Avonmouth Popular Concert Society gave a concert on January 15, the principal features of which were violin solos by Miss Marie Hall, who played with her accustomed skill Brahms's Concerto in D, dedicated to Joachim, and the late violinist's own Variations. The other instrumental composition was Sir Hubert Parry's Trio in B minor, the executants being Miss Marie Hall (violin), Mr. Ivor James (violoncello), and Mr. Hamilton Harty (pianoforte). The Avonmouth Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. P. Napier Miles, sang creditably Brahms's 'Marienlieder,' in addition to other part-songs by the same master. There was a large and appreciative audience.

On January 15 the Bristol Temperance Choral Society gave its twenty-seventh concert in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, the programme comprising Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' and a miscellaneous selection. The principal vocalists were Miss Ethel Beetlestone, Miss Maude England, Mr. Robert Courtney, of Barnstaple, and Mr. Alfred de Manby. Among the executants was Miss Marjorie Evans, a young violinist who fully sustained the reputation she has already gained, while Mr. C. A. Inman was the accompanist and Mr. F. Stone conducted.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society held its annual general meeting on January 9. The balance-sheet shows a small loss on last season's work, but the committee hope to continue the concerts during 1908.

The recitals of the Royal Dublin Society have been given, on January 6 by Mr. Ivor Atkins (organ), and on January 13 and 20 by the Esposito-Beel Quintet (Messrs. Sigmund Beel, Patrick Delany, Octave Grisard, Clyde Twelvetrees and Dr. Esposito). The programme on January 13 comprised Mendelssohn's early Pianoforte quartet, Schumann's Pianoforte quintet, and a Sonata by Locatelli, beautifully played by Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees, who made his first appearance at the concerts on this occasion. On January 20 the chief item of interest was Dr. Esposito's new Violin and Pianoforte sonata in E minor (Op. 46), which gained the first prize of 2000 francs at the International Musical Competition held in Paris last year, for which no less than sixty-eight sonatas were sent in. The work, in which great interest was displayed, was most beautifully played by the composer and Mr. Sigmund Beel, and enthusiastically received by a large audience. Mozart's Pianoforte quartet in E flat and Arensky's Pianoforte quintet completed a most interesting and attractive programme.

Vocal recitals were given at the Antient Concert Rooms, on January 18 and 22, by Mr. Plunket Greene. Miss Constance Greene, as on many previous occasions, was the accompanist. Besides a miscellaneous selection of songs the programme included Somervell's 'Maude' cycle and

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The programme for the extra concert, on December 30, of Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral series was as usual arranged on rather lighter and more popular lines than the others. It included the Overture to 'Fidelio' (No. 4), 'Danse des sylphes' (Berlioz), Introduction to Act 3 and Dance of Apprentices ('Die Meistersinger'), Prelude to Act 3, 'Troubadour' (A. C. Mackenzie), 'Procession of the gods into Valhalla' ('Das Rheingold'), Ballade and Air Slave with variations, from 'Coppelia' (Delibes), 'A l'Espagnole' (Cowen), and the Overture to 'William Tell.' The vocalist, Mr. Robert Radford, was heard to advantage in Mozart's 'Qui sdegno,' Purcell's 'Arise, arise ye subterranean winds,' and in Stanford's 'Drake's drum' and 'The old Superb.'

At the eighth concert, on January 6, Dr. Cowen secured a remarkably fine performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony. The other orchestral numbers included Granville Bantock's Prelude to 'Sappho' and the ballet music from Beethoven's 'Prometheus.' Miss Eve Simony, who took the place of Miss Mary Münchhoff, made her first appearance at these concerts and created a highly favourable impression by her singing of the Indian bell song from Delibes's 'Lakme,' and Félicien David's 'La Perle du Bresil.

At the ninth concert, on January 13, in the absence of Dr. Cowen, Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, the leader of the Orchestra, conducted. The special feature of interest was the re-appearance of Mr. Raoul Pugno, who gave a delightful rendering of Mozart's Pianosorte concerto in E flat, being no less successful in his interpretation of César Franck's Symphonic poem 'Les Djinns.' The purely orchestral items comprised Mozart's 'Magic flute' overture and the Symphony in G minor, the 'Lohengrin' prelude and the 'Ride of the Valkyries.'

At the tenth concert, on January 20, Dr. Cowen conducting, Lady Halle gave charming performances of the Mendelssohn Concerto and the Romance from Joachim's 'Hungarian Concerto and the Romance from Joachim's 'Hungarian' Concerto. The programme also contained Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, Meyerbeer's 'Struensee' overture, and two of Brahms's 'Hungarian' dances.

The fifth of the Edinburgh Classical Concerts, on December 21, took the form of a pianoforte and violin recital by MM. Raoul Pugno and Georges Enesco, who joined forces in Mozart's Sonata in A major (No. 17, Peters' Edition) and Grieg's Sonata in C minor (Op. 45). M. Pugno played Schumann's 'Faschingsschwank aus Wien' and a group of Chopin pieces, and M. Enesco performed movements from Bach's Sonata in B minor, for violin alone.

The first of Herr Ernst Denhof's present season's series of chamber music concerts was given on January 18. Herr Denhof was assisted by Professor Johann Kruse (violin), Professor Julius Klengel (violoncello), and Mrs. Henry J. Wood (vocalist). The programme included trios by Tchaikovsky in A minor (Op. 50) and Schumann in D minor (Op. 63). Each of the instrumentalists contributed solos, and Mrs. Henry J. Wood sang songs by Richard Strauss, Hugo Wolf, and Brahms. Mr. A. Scott Jupp was the accompanist.

Performances of 'The Messiah' were given by Mr. Moonie's choir on December 28, and by the Edinburgh Choral Union (conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson) on

New Year's Day.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On Christmas Day the Choral and Orchestral Union provided a very attractive programme which included overtures by Cornelius and Berlioz, Beethoven's 'Pastoral' symphony, and songs charmingly rendered by Miss Antonia Dolores. On New Year's Day the Choral Union gave its customary 'Messiah' concert before a large audience, and the same work was sung the next evening by the Young Men's Christian Association Choir under Mr. R. L. Reid. On January 9 that enterprising and enthusiastic body of amateurs, the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, ably conducted by Mr. John Cullen, gave a most meritorious rendering of Weber's 'Der Freischutz,' and three scenes from Grieg's 'Olaf Trygvason.' The choral portions of the works were sung with that certainty of attack and attention to light and shade which betoken careful and painstaking study. Excellent soloists had been engaged, the best work in this connection being done by Miss Edith Evans, Mr. John McCormack and Mr. Robert Burnett. The Scottish Orchestra supplied the accompaniments.

Mr. Henri Verbrugghen was the solo violinist and Mr. Ben Davies the vocalist at the ninth classical concert on January 2, the former playing Saint-Saëns's third Violin concerto excellently. The orchestral programme comprised also Haydn's Symphony in E flat (No. 4 of the Rieter-Biedermann edition), a work rarely beard here, and a first performance in Glasgow of the Eastern Dance from Coleridge-Taylor's incidental music to 'Nero.' The tenth concert, on January 7, was notable for Dr. Cowen's fine interpretation of Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben,' given for the first time in Scotland. In sharp contrast to Strauss's tone-poem was Mendelssohn's overture 'A calm sea and prosperous voyage,' with which the concert opened. Another feature of the evening's music was the singing of Miss Eve Simony, whose vocal technique is quite wonderful. Mr. Henri Verbrugghen directed the eleventh concert on January 14, and again proved himself a conductor of distinction. Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in E flat (K. 271) and César Franck's symphonic poem 'Les Djinns' were given for the first time here, the pianoforte part in both works being beautifully played by Mr. Raoul Pugno. The programme likewise included Mozart's Symphony in G minor, two Wagner excerpts, and Tchaikovsky's Casse Noisette' suite.

Dr. Cowen conducted two very interesting novelties at the twelfth concert on January 21—the Prelude to Granville Bantock's 'Sappho,' and Liszt's 'Dante' symphony for orchestra, organ, and female voices. The ladies of the Choral Union, with Mr. J. E. Hodgson at the organ, assisted in the performance of the latter work, and Lady Hallé gave a beautiful rendering of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto and the Romance from Joachim's 'Hungarian'

The Saturday Popular Orchestral Concerts have been attracting crowded audiences during the season, and interesting programmes have been the rule. Among the more important items have been Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung Among the more and 'Ein Heldenleben,' Brahms's C minor Symphony, and Bach's Concerto No. 2 in C minor for two pianofortes and orchestra, the pianoforte part in the last-named being played by Dr. Cowen and Mr. Philip E. Halstead.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A very fine performance of Handel's 'Samson' was given by the Welsh Choral Union on December 28, under the inspiring direction of Mr. Harry Evans. From the opening chorus to the final 'Let their celestial concerts' the choral numbers were marked by that precision, perception, and power which have made the singing of this fine choir unsurpassed. To mention one example, the six-part 'Hear Jacob's God' was especially realised with an intensity and fervour typical of the spirit of the Welsh people. The principals were Miss Esta D'Argo, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. John McCormack and Mr. Herbert Brown. The processes and Mr. Herbert Brown. orchestra, led by Mr. Akeroyd, played well, and there was a crowded audience.

Two interesting and enjoyable concerts were given on January 11 by the London New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Thomas Beecham, to whom belongs the credit of introducing four notable works to Liverpool, viz., the symphonic legend 'La Forét Enchantée' (Vincent d'Indy), a charming work, and the tone-poems 'Paris' (Delius), 'Sarka' (Smetana) and 'The golden spinning-wheel' (Dvorák). Music of this calibre evidently appeals to the temperament of the conductor who skilfully controls this fine body of native players. It was regrettable that no great classic engaged their attention, and in the only Beethoven number, the Pianoforte concerto in E flat, they appeared to rather less advantage in the orchestral accompaniments than elsewhere. The solo pianoforte part was magnificently played by Mr. Backhaus, who was recalled again and again after playing Chopin's Polonaise in A flat. At the evening concert Madame Ella Russell sang. Of the new works brought forward, Mr. Delius's tone-poem 'Paris' made a favourable impression. It is an exceedingly clever work, full of orchestral device and resource, and withal of melodic as well as constructive interest.

At the seventh concert of the Philharmonic Society on January 14, Sir Charles Santley received a welcome which must have assured him not only of hearty congratulations on his new dignity but also of the affection in which he is held in his native city. Sir Charles, who was in excellent form, sang Handel's 'O ruddier than the cherry,' and a florid air by Paer, with his old vocal mastery. Another great artist, Lady Hallé, also received a warm welcome and was heard in Spohr's 'Dramatic' Concerto. An unusually interesting concert included Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, conducted by Dr. Cowen.

The regretted death of Mr. J. W. Collinson removes a well-known and esteemed musician and violinist from local circles. An excellent player on the violin and viola, he had also been the conductor of the Sunday Society's Orchestra for some years past, a post he held with tact and ability

The first performance in England of Mr. Frederick Delius's rhapsody 'Brigg Fair,' was given on January 18 by the Liverpool Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Granville Bantock. This fine work is a slow movement in pastoral style, based upon a Lincolnshire folk-song descriptive of a country swain journeying to meet his sweetheart at the fair. The music is of tranquil beauty, the central idea being surrounded by moving polyphony richly coloured. Before the close it reaches a climax of real grandeur, and all through betokens the mind and hand of a master. Mr. Havergal Brian's 'English Suite,' in three movements—'March,' 'Valse and love scene' and 'Carnival'—performed on the same occasion, is cleverly constructed and tuneful, especially in the first movement; but the humour in the Carnival is carried to a somewhat perilous excess of realism. Other incidents of an exceptional programme were Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' and Dvorák's 'From the New World' symphony. The vocalist was Mr. Walter Hyde, who used his tenor voice effectively in two excerpts from Wagner.

A highly-interesting and instructive lecture on 'Folk songs' was given in the David Lewis Club on January 22 by Mr. Cecil Sharp. He was fortunate in his vocal exponent, Miss Mattie Kay, who sang delightfully in three groups of quaint and beautiful airs. Mr. Sharp particularly advocates the teaching of music in the form of English folk-songs to the children in the elementary schools, as the true basis for a future School of English music.

· MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Hallé concert on January 9, Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, the 'Oberon' overture, the Symphonic Poem No. 10 ('Hunnenschlacht') and Dvorák's 'Slavonic Rhapsodie No. 3 were performed. Mile. Antonia Dolores was the vocalist. Mr. Fritz Beidler took Dr. Richter's place as conductor on January 16, and very agreeably impressed the audience by the unexaggerated directness and definiteness of his methods. Beyond securing worthy renderings of the 'Italian' Symphony and of the 'Tannhäuser' overture, his restraint of the band on behalf of the soloists was commendably noticeable. The vocalist, Miss Edith Evans, in her rendering of 'Softly sighs' and Señor 'Elsa's prayer' made a most favourable impression. Pablo Casals in his violoncello solos—Schumann's Concerto (Op. 129), Dvorák's 'Waldesruhe' Adagio, and especially in the dances from the second of Bach's six sonatas for violoncello-charmed the audience with the warmth and exquisite finish of his playing.

With great credit to himself, and with equal honour to the choir and their chorus-master, Mr. R. H. Wilson, a finely dramatic performance of 'Elijah'-the forty-second at these concerts—was secured at the concert of January 23. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Harold Wilde and Sir Charles Santley.

Reference is made on p. 92 to the first Hallé concert, given on January 30, 1858. The jubilee of this excellent organization was to be celebrated at the concert of January 30, too late for notice in the present issue.

Prof. Willy Hess, formerly leader of the Hallé Orchestra, was the solo violinist at the Gentlemen's Concert of January 13. He met with a hearty reception, and brilliantly performed Max Bruch's third Violin concerto (Op. 58), Bach's Adagio and Fugue in G minor, and a study (or caprice) by Paganini. There was a delightful performance under Dr. Richter of Mozart's E flat Symphony, and the dainty rendering of the little Rondino in E flat, by Beethoven, for two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, gave great pleasure. A little Russian boy, Master Tony Maaskoff, a pupil of Dr. Brodsky at the Royal Manchester College of Music, exhibited rare talent as a violinist at the Promenade Concert of December 28, when he played Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor, Sarasate's 'Ziegeunerweisen,' and Dworák's 'Humoresque.' Mr. Joseph Lycett was the vocalist.

Serenade for strings, the violoncello solo being played by Mr. J. H. Foulds. At the concert of January 11, Mr. Edward De Jong renewed all his old triumphs as a flautist, playing a 'Concertino' by Chaminade, a 'Romance' by Molique, Briccialdi's 'Le Carnival de Venise' variations, and his own arrangement of 'Auld Robin Grey.' Miss Lucy Nuttall, a promising young local contralto, was the vocalist. Cowen's suite, 'Language of Flowers'; the No. 4 of Liszt's orchestrated 'Hungarian Rhapsodies'; and Saint-Saëns's Danse Macabre' were among the instrumental selections.

Mr. Brand Lane has apparently resolved upon devoting one of his subscription concerts annually to the purposes of a recital by his Philharmonic Choir. He at least repeated the very interesting experiment this season, at his concert on January 18, when the programme consisted largely of worthily selected vocal pieces by Cornelius, Brahms, Elgar, Stanford, John E. West, Dudley Buck, Eaton Faning, and others. The admirable singing of the choir was much enjoyed by the large audience. Violin solos were played by Miss Irene Penso, and the vocalists were Miss Lydia Nervil and Mr. Watkin Mills.

Mr. Francis Donald Tovey appeared at the concert of the Schiller-Anstalt of January 11, and his facile execution and structural grasp impressed a critical audience. With Mr. Carl Fuchs as an able colleague he played Beethoven's Variations on 'See the conquering hero comes,' for pianoforte and violoncello; and for the same combination of pianoforte and violonceilo; and for the same communation of instruments Brahms's delightful Sonata (Op. 38). His solos were Beethoven's 'Rondo a Capriccio,' three Chopin Mazurkas, and the Ballade in F major. Mr. Carl Fuchs played the Adagio and Rondo movements of Dvorák's Violoncello concerto, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mrs. Fuchs; and Mr. Horstio Connell gave admirable interpretations of songs by Brahms, Bach and Max Mayer. A vocal and pianoforte recital, devoted to Schubert and Schumann, was given by Mr. Frederic Austin and Mr. Isidor Cohn on January 6. Mr. Cohn immediately followed Mr. Austin's rendering of 'Der Wanderer' by playing Schubert's 'Wanderer-Fantasia' (Op. 15) in its original form, and not in the Liszt version. Mr. Austin's Schumann selection consisted of the Heine Song-cycle 'Dichterliebe, of which, to Mr. Cohn's accompanying, he sang the whole sequence of sixteen songs. Mr. Cohn played the Etudes Symphoniques.

The programme of Mr. Max Mayer's second Chamber Concert, given on January 20, contained the Brahms Pianoforte quartet in A (Op. 26); Schubert's 'Forellen' Quintet in A (Op. 114); Beethoven's Variations on an air from the 'Magic flute,' for pianoforte and violoncello; and songs by Schubert, Brahms and Max Mayer, sung with great dramatic fervour by Miss Tilly Koenen. Mr. Max Mayer (pianoforte) was associated with Mr. C. Rawdon Briggs (violin), Mr. Speelman (viola), Mr. C. Darbishire Jones (violoncello) and Mr. Hoffmann (double-bass). The programme of He Brodsky Quartet concert on January 21 consisted of Haydn's Quartet in G (Op. 17, No. 5), Schubert's second Pianoforte trio in E flat—Mr. Egon Petri at the pianoforte-and Beethoven's String quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1).

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

With the exception of a few deferred 'Messiah' performances—one in connection with the Sheffield Wesleyan Mission (conductor, Mr. H. C. Jackson) being worthy of special mention by reason of the size and excellent quality of the chorus-choral music has not been much in evidence during January. Mr. Joseph Cooper secured a spirited performance of Haydn's 'The Creation' from his zealous singers at Penistone on New Year's Day, and Mr. Reeves Charlesworth directed an ambitious and, on the whole, capital performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' at Wycliffe Congregational Church a week later.

A concert of wind-instrument chamber music, held in the Sheffield Temperance Hall on January 10, promoted by Mr. John Parr, a well-known local bassoonist, was not as Dvorák's 'Humoresque.' Mr. Joseph Lycett was the vocalist. largely attended as its merits deserved. A competent septet The orchestral selections included Robert Volkmann's of instrumentalists comprised Messrs. G. A. Brooke (flute), W. Brooke (oboe), F. A. Jackman (clarinet), R. Jackson (horn), J. H. Parkes (violin), John Parr (bassoon), and O. C. Owrid (pianoforte). Beethoven's Grand quintet (Op. 16), a Quintet by W. Edmondstoune Duncan (Op. 38), a duet for bassoon and pianoforte by the same composer, Barthe's 'Passacaille' for five wind instruments, and the Scherzo from Miss Arkwright's pleasing Trio for pianoforte, clarinet and bassoon were the chief features of an interesting programme.

At the fourth of the Chamber Music Society's concerts, held on January 21, Messrs. Hawcroft, Cawood, Herbert Parkin and M. Taylor played Mozart's Quartet in D minor and five Novellettes by Glazounov.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

As usual, this has been a close time for serious music, and there is but little that requires chronicling in Yorkshire. One of the Leeds Bohemian Quartet's concerts, which attract a really interested and discriminating audience, took place on January 15, when Borodine's first quartet (in A) interested its hearers greatly, and was ably played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton, who entered into the spirit of the work, and realised the demands it makes upon the virtuosity of the players. Schumann's second quartet (in F) and one of Haydn's, in G minor, completed the programme. The Leeds Municipal Orchestra, on December 21, introduced Liszt's 'Les Préludes' and the 'Karelia' suite and 'Frühlingslied' of Sibelius, in addition to the 'Unfinished' Symphony of Schubert, of which Mr. Fricker gave a thoroughly sympathetic and artistic interpretation. At the next concert, on January 18, the programme included Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony and Esser's clever adaptation of Bach's Organ Toccata in F, a thing which goes far to overcome one's prejudices by its effectiveness. Another out-of the one's prejudices by its effectiveness. Another out-of-theway piece was Beethoven's Rondino in E flat for wind instruments, an early work of the Bonn period, interesting historically but of course not characteristic. On January 8 the 'Edith Robinson String Quartet' gave a concert at Leeds, the four ladies showing an excellent ensemble in quartets by Haydn, Beethoven (Op. 74), and Dvorák (Op. 51). As might be expected, they were most successful in the first and last, but their performances were throughout finished and artistic. On January 14 Vecsey visited Leeds at one of Messrs. Haddock's musical evenings, and showed that he has already developed into a mature and thoughtful artist with splendid sustained tone and a virile style. His playing of Vieuxtemps's D minor Concerto gave that work a dignity and impressiveness that one does not as a rule associate with it. The pianist was Madame Fischer-Sobell, who, if not highly sympathetic, is a brilliant and forceful

At the Bradford Subscription Concert, on January 17, the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, introduced Strauss's 'Heldenleben' to Yorkshire. A fine performance was given, and the vivid characterization of the music seemed to make a strong impression upon the audience. Mr. Pablo Casals gave a warm and sympathetic interpretation of Schumann's Violoncello concerto, and Mile. Antonia Dolores's finished vocalisation was very agreeable.

The Hull Symphony Orchestra, at one of its afternoon concerts on January 16, gave the second and third movements of Raff's picturesque, if rather superficial, 'Lenore' symphony. A greater novelty was the 'Kassya' ballet suite of Delibes, a clever piece of characteristic music. One of Gluck's beautiful 'pantomime' airs from 'Orpheus' and the Zauberflöte overture and march completed a very interesting concert which Mr. Arthur Wallerstein conducted with an abundance of spirit, giving vitality to all the music.—The Cleckheaton Orchestral Society's concert on January 15 was distinguished by an able performance of Schumann's Pianoforte concerto, with Mr. York Bowen as soloist. Mr. Charles Stott conducted.

Mr. C. Bechstein has had the honour of supplying a pianoforte to her Majesty the Queen of Norway at the palace, Christiania.

foreign Motes.

BARCELONA.

Courtcapellmeister Beidler has given four performances of 'Tannhäuser' (the Paris version) at the Gran Teatro del Liceo. The theatre was sold out on all four nights, and the success was exceptionally great. Arrangements have been made with the conductor to return here next season, also to give performances at Madrid and Lisbon.

BERLIN.

The celebrated organ in the St. Marien Kirche-erected in 1722 by Joachim Wagner, in his day an organ-builder of the first rank—is now in the hands of Sauer, the Court organbuilder. For a time, therefore, the admirable weekly organ recitals by music-director Irrgang will be discontinued.

BRUSSELS.

Edgar Tinel, the composer of 'Franciscus,' has just completed a music-drama bearing the title 'Katherina,' which is to be produced next season at La Monnaie. The libretto, by Leo Hemsteeden, is based on dramatic episodes in the life of Sainte Catherine of Alexandria.

Mr. Isidore de Lara's new opera, in four acts and five tableaux, and entitled 'Soléa,' was successfully produced at the Opera here on December 20. The composer has written his own libretto.

HEIDELBERG.

Performances have been given by the Bach Society, under the direction of Professor Wolfrum, of Liszt's 'Dante' symphony and Berlioz's 'Symphonie fantastique.' In both works the orchestra was hidden, and in the former the choir also was invisible.

MOSCOW.

A concert, under the direction of M. Francis Casadesus, was given here on January 25, with a programme devoted to French composers, who were represented by Alfred Bruneau, Gustave Charpentier, Eugène d'Harcourt, Navier Leroux, Georges Marty, Massenet and M. Casadesus himself.

A new choral work by Gabriel Pierné has been produced here. It is an oratorio entitled 'Les enfants à Bethléem,' and has been written entirely for children's voices.

M. Chevillard being unfortunately still troubled with his eyes, was fortunate in his deputy, Siegmund v. Hausegger, who conducted two Lamoureux concerts. It was his first appearance here, and he achieved great success. On the first evening the programme was devoted to German composers (Beethoven, Wagner and Strauss), and Berlioz reigned supreme at the second concert.

On December 18 Perosi produced his new oratorio 'Transitus anime' in the Sala Pia of the Vatican. The first part of the programme included his two orchestral suites, entitled 'Rome' and 'Venice.'——Signor Francesco, the musicographer, has made an interesting discovery in the library of the Academy of St. Cecilia. Among a number of old operas he found one by Gluck that has hitherto not been known even by name. Entitled 'Il Tigrane,' the opera was written for Crema in the year 1743, and the volume contains the names of the vocalists who took part in the production of the work.

ST. PETERSBURG.

Rimsky-Korsakoff, the Nestor of Russian composers, has just completed a new opera entitled 'Zolotoi Pietanchok,' which will be produced during the season at the Imperial Theatre under the composer's direction.

TURIN.

The Teatro Regio opened its season on December 19 with Massenet's 'Ariana.' The composer, who was present, ways called many times before the curtain.

VIRNNA.

Goldmark's long-expected opera, 'Ein Wintermärchen,' based upon Shakespeare's 'A Winter's Tale,' was produced at the Court Opera on January 2, under the direction of Bruno Walter, and with success. The excellent interpreters were Mesdames Kurz (Perdita), von Mildenburg (Hermione), Kittl (Paulina), and Messrs. Slezak (Leontes) and Demuth (Polyxenes). The composer is now in his seventy-seventh year.—Seventeen songs by Schubert, in his own handwriting, have been discovered in an album among old papers belonging to the family of Thérèse Grob, a vocalist who was a friend of the composer. With one exception all the songs are unknown.

WARSAW.

Emil Mlynarski having retired from the directorship of the Conservatoire of this city, the post was offered to Paderewski, the most important Polish musician of the present day; and it is a matter of general satisfaction that the distinguished pianist has accepted the appointment.

WEIMAR.

On March 21, 1825, the old Court Theatre was burned to the ground. 'The stage connected with my thirty years' labour is in ruins,' mourned Goethe. A new building was quickly built to serve a temporary purpose, but it actually lasted for eighty years. Of the many interesting events which took place within its walls, the one now best remembered was the production of 'Lohengrin' under Liszt's direction, in 1850. A new theatre, erected after the plans of Max Littmann, was inaugurated on January 11. Goethe was represented by the Prologue to 'Faust' and 'Wallenstein's Lager'; Liszt by music based on motives from his 'Tasso,' composed by Weingartner as an accompaniment to the festival address delivered by Richard Voss; and Wagner by the closing scene from 'Die Meistersinger,' performed under the direction of Peter Raabe.

The first concert of Mr. Munro Davison's Choral Society (now in its second season) took place on December 17 at the Northern Polytechnic. Its chief feature was Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio, Parts I., II. and IV., which greatly impressed the large audience numbering 800 persons. In the second part of the programme Dr. Walford Davies's charming 'Nursery rhymes,' sung for the first time by a large choral force, proved an effective contrast. A commendable feature of the chorus-singing was the truly expressive and non-mechanical interpretation of Bach's sublime music. Much success attended the efforts of the soloists, Miss Maud Hardy, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Henry Gurney and Mr. William Forington, the interpretation of the recitatives by Mr. Forington being indeed a revelation to many who regard this form of vocal art as lacking in interest. Special praise must be awarded Mr. Herbert Hodge for his skilful rendering of the difficult accompaniments on the organ, especially as he transposed several of the more exacting movements in order to bring the vocal pitch more into accordance with that used by the composer. The 'echo' in the soprano air 'Ah, my Saviour,' was sung by Miss Priest who, although invisible to the audience, was effectively audible. The oratorio was repeated on January 12 at the free Sunday recital, when 900 persons attended; on that occasion the work was heard throughout without applause, its impressiveness being thereby greatly enhanced. Mr. Munro Davison conducted both performances.

At a meeting of the Leeds musical festival committee the report of the recent festival showed that the receipts were £8,635, as compared with £9,409 in 1904 and £11,555 in 1901. The total expenditure was £8,175, which was much less than that of the last festival, owing to the policy of stringent economy. The net profit was £460. It was resolved to add £374, interest from reserve fund, and distribute the total, £834, among the medical charities of the city. Mr. T. Marshall, who moved the adoption of the city. Mr. T. Marshall, who moved the adoption of the report, referred to the continuous decline in the profits since 1889, when they realised £3,143. Festival by festival the profit had grown less, until in 1904 it was as low as £304. May Roberts, Mr. Reg He did not think the decline in the receipts could be attributed this year to the programme, because all the critics had agreed that it was excellent. They had to remember that since 1889 other festivals had been established; and another factor was the increase in the number of good concerts which were now provided in the city. In his view they would have to face deficits in the future, because they had brought the process of economising to its lowest limits. They could not save further without impairing the quality and value of the festival.

The annual spring festival of the London Sunday School Choir will be held on February 22 at the Royal Albert Hall. The choir and orchestra will consist of 1,200 adult performers, and Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Wilfrid Platt have been engaged as solo vocalists. The orchestra of 200 performers, under the direction of Mr. Wesley Hammet, is to take part. Mr. William Whiteman will conduct, Mr. Horace G. Holmes is to preside at the organ, and Mrs. Mary Layton at the pianoforte. The Crystal Palace festival will take place on June 17, at which choirs of 9,000 voices will sing.

A highly successful violin and pianoforte recital was given by Miss Cantelo and Mr. Willy Hess on January 10 in the Mechanics' Hall, Nottingham. The programme included Schumann's Sonata in D minor and Grieg's in C minor for the two instruments. Mr. Hess played Joachim's Romance from the 'Hungarian' Concerto and Wieniawsky's Scherzo Tarantelle, and Miss Cantelo performed some Chopin pieces. Both individually and collectively the artists were heard at their best, and their performances gave great satisfaction.

The following scholarships at the Royal Academy of Music will be competed for in April next: (1) Sterndale Bennett, (2) Thalberg, and (3) Parepa-Rosa. The candidates for all these scholarships must be British-born subjects, the last-named is available only for female vocalists. Full particulars can be obtained from the secretary of the Royal Academy of Music.

The Musicians' Company's scholarships at the Guildhall School of Music have been awarded to Miss Grace E. Hawkins, of Bedford, and Master Lionel George Stanton, of Hemel Hempstead; while Miss Elizabeth Weiss, of Dalston, and Miss Ethel Edith Bilsland, of Plumstead, have been specially commended.

The Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music and Kalendar for 1908 maintains the standard of previous issues as a useful book of reference.

Country and Colonial Hews.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

ABERDARE.—The Cwmaman Choral Society commenced its tenth season with a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on December 25. The concert began with Mendelssohn's Funeral march and a Requiem specially written by Mr. W. J. Evans (the conductor), in memory of several prominent members of the Society who had died since last season. The performance throughout was a most creditable one, and included German's Welsh Rhapsody by the orchestra, led by Mr. Arthur Angle. The solo vocalists engaged were Miss Ida Kahn, Mr. Anderson Nicoll and Mr. Dan Richards.

AYR.—The Ayr Choral Union, under the able conductorship of Mr. Hugh M'Nabb, gave a very creditable performance of Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' on December 17. The soloists were the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford, Mr. Chandos Craddock and Mr. Llewellyn Roberts. The accompaniments were supplied by the Ayr Philharmonic Orchestral Society, assisted by a few professional players, and Mr. W. E. Senior presided at the organ.

BEBINGTON.—On January 9 the Wirral Musical Society gave a praiseworthy performance of Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' (under the conductorship of Mr. R. H. Crapper), at Mayer Hall. Miss Flossie Lee was the solo vocalist. In the miscellaneous part of the concert Mr. Albert Dunford played the Fantasie caprice of Vieuxtemps, and Miss Pattie May Roberts, Mr. Reginald Peterson, and Mr. Price Jones contributed vocal solos.

BECKENHAM.—The Choral Society gave a very effective rendering of Parry's 'Pied Piper' on January 21. In the miscellaneous selection which followed, Maunder's 'Song of Thor' and 'Lullaby,' by Harvey Löhr, were excellently sung by the choir, and songs were given by Miss Eva Hardy, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Dan Price, the last two artists successfully representing the Piper and the Mayor in Parry's cantata. Miss Isobel Purdon played acceptably Beethoven's Romance in F and Hubay's 'Kejre Kati.' Mrs. C. M. Pascall was the accompanist, Mons. D. M. Trytel led the orchestra, and Mr. George J. Hall conducted.

CAPE TOWN.—The third and last concert of the year by the Musical Society took place in the City Hall on December 5, the Society on this occasion having the assistance of the combined choral societies. The work of the orchestra alone consisted of Sullivan's 'Ouvertura disallo' and Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture, which were played with great spirit and enthusiasm, and the combined forces were effectively heard in Stanford's 'The Revenge' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens.' The performance reflected much credit on the able conductor, Dr. Barrow Dowling. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Juta and Mr. Robert Tait.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The fourth subscription concert of the Musical Union took place in His Majesty's Theatre on November 19. The chief features of the programme were Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, the solo part played by Miss Katie Young; Sullivan's Festival Te Deum; and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' the soprano solo in the last two works being sung by Miss Rosina Buckmann. Weber's Concertino for clarinet and orchestra, with Mr. D. Sinclair as soloist, was also performed. Mr. S. R. White led the orchestra, and Dr. J. C. Bradshaw conducted.

COBHAM.—The Cobham Orchestral and Choral Society's first concert of the season took place on January 22, when one of the main features of a varied programme was a most successful rendering of Hamish MacCunn's 'Wreck of the Hesperus,' under the conductorship of Mr. Frederick J. Hopper. The choir was also heard in Benedict's 'Hunting Song,' Barnby's 'Lullaby,' and Pinsuti's 'Good-night, beloved.'

CORSHAM (WILTS). — The Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis night' and Cowen's 'Rose maiden' in the Methuen Hall on January 15. The solo parts were efficiently rendered by Miss Mary Lund, Miss Ada Bennett, Mr. G. F. Sands, Rev. S. M. Davies and Mr. R. Pearce. The choir sang excellently. Mr. Herbert Spackman led a small but effective orchestra, and Mr. Lewin Spackman conducted.

CROYDON.—The Central Croydon Choral Society gave an excellent concert on January 18 in the Public Hall. The programme included Elgar's 'Black Knight' and Parry's 'Pied Piper' and 'Blest pair of Sirens,' all of which received a very satisfactory rendering. There was a full orchestra, led by Mr. Stanton Rees. The singing of the choir throughout was enthusiastic and at the same time careful. The solo artists were Mr. James Davis and Mr. Charles Tree (vocalists), and Miss Frances O. Ison, who displayed admirable technique and musical feeling in the Violin concerto in B minor by Saint-Säens. Croydon is fortunate in possessing so admirably-equipped a musical association, and Mr. Ronald A. Richards, who conducted, may be congratulated on the success of the performance.

FAVERSHAM. — The Philharmonic Society's fifteenth concert was held in the Lecture Hall on January 9, under the conductorship of Mr. W. J. Keech. The chief features of the programme were the conductor's setting of 'The Inchcape Rock'—an interesting and musicianly work for tenor solo, chorus and orchestra—which was performed with much spirit, and the first and second movements of Beethoven's fifth Symphony. The remainder of the programme comprised solos by Miss Tatchell and Mr. Alexander Webster (vocalists), Mr. Ernest G. Cox (violin), Mr. E. G. Ogden (bassoon), and the choruse's Galatea, dry thy tears,' from Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' the Soldiers' chorus ('Faust') and Bridal chorus ('Lohengrin.') Invercargill (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave its third concert this season in the Municipal Hall on November 15. The orchestral selections included the overtures 'Coriolanus' and 'Ruy Blas,' two movements from Haydn's seventh Symphony, German's 'Gipsy Suite' and Massenet's ballet music 'Herodiade.' These received very meritorious performance by the orchestra, which was led by Mr. W. J. Ferguson. The choral numbers comprised Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land,' Macfarren's 'Three fishers' and 'Sands o' Dee, 'Matona, lovely maiden' (Orlando Lassus), 'Love song' (for ladies' voices) and 'Dim-lit woods' (Brahms), which were excellently rendered by the choir. Mr. C. Gray, who was responsible for the satisfactory training of both choir and orchestra, conducted. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Crowther, Miss Peterson, Mr. A. S. Cookson, Mr. Tom Brown and Mr. D. Hutton.

KEMPSEY.—Mr. T. F. Dunhill's cantata 'Tubal Cain' was recently performed by the Kempsey Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. G. Street Chignell, of Worcester. The cantata, sung with great spirit, was repeated in the second part of the programme, a somewhat novel arrangement. The choir was well supported by a small orchestra, led by Mr. A. Quarterman.

LETCHWORTH.—An interesting concert was given in this Garden City by the Margaret Fowles Orchestral Society on January 14. The programme included Haydn's Symphony in D, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Characteristic Waltzes,' part of Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony, and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, given under the conductorship of Dr. Leonard Fowles, the performance being considerably above the average. The soloists were Miss Armgart Allen, Mr. Barry Parker (vocalists), and Mrs. Crickmer (violinist).

LLANELLY.—Handel's 'Joshua' was performed on January 21 by the Bethel Choir with distinct success. The spirited singing of the choruses was largely due to the careful training by the conductor, Mr. J. Aneurin Thomas, and the orchestra—led by Mr. David Thomas—rendered commendable support. The solo vocalists were Madame Thomas, Miss Maggie Sambrook, Messrs. Richard Thomas and David Davies.

MUMBLES.—The Oystermouth and District Choral and Orchestral Society gave a performance of Van Bree's 'Ode to St. Cecilia's Day' on January 16 in the Kursaal. The solos were taken by Miss Edith Harlington, Miss Muriel Cavill led the orchestra, and Mr. E. A. Morris conducted. The second part of the programme included Mozart's overture to 'Figaro' and 'The Song of the Vikings' (Faning).

OSWESTRY.—Dr. Walford Davies recently gave a lecture on the 'Language of music' in connection with the Oswestry Choral Society. The lecture, full of information and singularly interesting, was listened to with the closest attention. The illustrations, sung by the members of the Society under the conductorship of Mr. A. E. Floyd, included Pearsall's 'O who will o'er the downs' and 'In dulci jubilo,' Parry's 'If I had but two little wings,' three movements from Bach's motet 'Jesu, priceless treasure,' a part-song for female voices, 'The year's at the spring,' composed by the conductor, and Dr. Davies's charming carol 'O little town of Bethlehem.'

READING.—Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' was performed by the Broad Street Congregational Chapel Choir in the small Town Hall on January 8. The performance by the choir and orchestra was very creditable, especially that of the former, and the solo vocalists were Miss Elsie Coombs, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Allen Frame and Mr. Edgar Archer. Mr. F. W. Harvey conducted.

SUNDERLAND.—Mr. A. Bevan gave his first Chamber Concert in the Victoria (Alexandra) Hall on January 15, when the chief attractions of the programme were Beethoven's Pianoforte and Violin sonata (Op. 30, No. 2) and Brahms's Sonata in D minor for the same instruments. In these works the concert-giver had the invaluable assistance of Miss Fanny Davies. The two artists also gave several solos on their respective instruments with much success. The Rev. A. Ramsbotham accompanied the violin solos given by Mr. Bevan.

TORONTO.—Three highly successful concerts were given by the National Chorus, under the conductorship of Dr. Albert Ham, on December 16 and 17, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied piper,' receiving especially fine renderings. Several unaccompanied numbers were sung with that delicacy and refinement of expression for which this fine choir is noted. The New York Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Walter Damrosch, gave excellent interpretations of Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march, Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' Berlioz's 'Symphonie Fantastique,' Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, besides selections from Wagner and Grieg. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Davies, Mr. Kelley Cole and Mr. Francis Rogers.

Wallington (Surrey).—A concert was given by the Wallington Orchestral Society in Carshalton Public Hall on January 11 with much success. The orchestral selections comprised Weber's overture to 'Der Freischütz,' Haydn's Symphony in E flat (three movements), Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march (No. 4). The band was ably conducted by Mr. Arthur Dutton; Miss Cicely Chapman presided at the pianoforte, and Miss Evelyn Vernham displayed a good voice and artistic feeling in some vocal selections. Not the least notable features of this enjoyable concert were the excellent playing of Miss Hilda G. Nye in the Violin concerto and of Miss Chapman in Chopin's Ballade in G minor for the pianoforte.

WARLINGHAM.—The Musical Society gave the first concert of its eighth season on January 22, when interest chiefly centred in the performance of Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper.' A remarkably good, intelligent and graphic rendering rewarded the unflagging care of the conductor, Mr. John E. West. The parts of the Mayor and Piper were excellently sung by Mr. Arthur Goundry and Mr. Henry Plevy.

Answers to Correspondents.

Weir.—(1) It is not a question of 'policy' but of physical endurance, as to whether it is allowable to break the runs in Handel's 'Ev'ry valley' (Messiah). (2) Prout's edition of the 'Messiah' may be regarded as the standard version: it contains suggested metronomic speeds. (3) 'O Thou that tellest' is usually beaten six quavers in a bar, not two dotted crotchets. (4) Messrs. Novello have recently issued a classified list of anthems, a copy of which will be supplied gratis upon application. (5) The following are suggested as being 'taking quartets for male voices': 'The Goslings' (Bridge); 'The long day closes (Sullivan)'; 'Come away' (Schäfer); 'Absence,' and 'When evening twilight' (Hatton); 'Good night, beloved' (Pinsuti); 'In absence' (Bock); 'O, peaceful night' (German).

W. W. Findon (Nisbet); 'Souvenir of Sir Arthur Sullivan' (Newnes); 'Arthur Sullivan,' by H. TENORI.—(1) The titles of a few good tenor songs will be found in the following list.—Sacred: 'Come unto Me' and 'Father, forgive' (Coenen), 'Angel hosts' (Gounod) and 'Lead, kindly Light' (Pughe Evans). Secular: 'Too late' (Atkins), 'Amongst the willows' (Brewer), 'In Moonlight' (Elgar), 'To one in Paradise' (Sullivan), 'Eleanore' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'Stars of the summer night' (Tours). (2) Your 'old copy of music' is of no intrinsic value.

REED.—The following is a selection of 'interesting and moderately difficult Morning and Evening Services': King Hall in B flat, Field in D, Stanford in B flat, Smart in F, Gadsby in C, Stainer in A, Garrett in F (Service No. 2), Coleridge-Taylor in F, and Ireland in F (Te Deum only). Messrs. Novello are about to issue a graded list of the Popular Services published by them. For 'good secular pieces, with different movements and tenipi, for male voices,' see the following: 'The phantom host' (Hegar), 'Jack Horner' (Distin), 'To Arms!' (L. de Rillé), 'A revolt at Memphis' (A series of four male part-songs) (L. de Rillé), 'A hymn to Cupid' (Martin) and 'Come, let us join' (Beale).

H. C. L.—(1) In regard to the trill in Bach's Prelude, 'Ich ruf' zu dirr, Herr Jesu Christ,' Mr. Dannreuther, in his primer 'Musical Ornamentation,' says: 'Shakes should always be started with the accessory when the main note has just been struck'; therefore your rendering of the ornament in bar 3, as noted in your letter, is quite correct. And then as to the appoggiatura in the following bar, the small note (D) should occupy the time of a semiquaver. (2) In Smart's Trio for organ, No. 2 (Andante alla pastorale), the shakes should be continued and finish at the end of the bars in all cases, including bar 59.

B. J. P.—We do not know of a residential college of music for ladies. Considering your recently acquired qualification—upon which you are to be sincerely congratulated—you should not find any difficulty in obtaining the post of assistant music-mistress at some large college where you would acquire more knowledge and experience, especially in teaching.

Handelian.—At bar 7 of the chorus 'O first-created beam' (Samson) the soprano note is E in the German Handel Society's edition; in the old edition (Novello) it is C, which seems to be more accurate. We will endeavour, through the courtesy of Sir Walter Parratt, to see the original autograph score at Buckingham Palace and will report the result in due course.

A. J. F. E.—If you refer to p. 93 of the present issue you will find that the prize in Messrs. Ricordi's opera competition has been awarded. The manuscript of the opera in which you are specially interested will, therefore, doubtless be returned to you in due course.

E. C. (North Carolina).—You cannot do better than consult the article on 'Irish Music' in the new edition (vol. ii.) of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians.' The ample bibliography at the end of the article doubtless will be found very useful for your purpose.

ZISKA. -We do not know of a book on the subject of pianoforte accompaniment. The attainment of that art is a matter of practice and experience. No book can teach 'time,' this is purely a matter for oral instruction by a competent teacher.

PLANTER.—You might apply to the several clergy in the British West Indies, stating your qualifications, or, as you yourself suggest, to the officials of the Church of Scotland, as you say that church is represented in several of the islands.

P. R.—We cannot recommend teachers or the methods of private individuals; but we have heard the method of the first gentleman named in your letter spoken of as efficacious in improving technique that has 'fallen off considerably.'

B. A. J.—Your tune is not devoid of merit; the second chord might certainly be improved; it is too weak for the accented part of the bar. The bass note should be B flat, with a corresponding alteration of the inner parts.

M. B.—You cannot do better than submit your Stradivarius violin, dated 1714, to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, will give you authoritative advice as to its genuineness.

M. J. K.—So far as we are aware, there is no book dealing with the instruction of brass and reed bands. The conductor is supposed to have learned, from a practical course of training, how to teach such a band.

E. W.—Your books are not of any special value, though they are interesting. If the Psalter, printed at Amsterdam in 1762, was of a much earlier date its intrinsic worth would be greatly increased.

M. R.—In Schumann's Fantasiestück No. 2, in A flat (Op. 111, bars 38, &c.), the semiquavers, in both the uppermost and lowest parts, are to be played after the last note of the triplet.

C. J. McC.—The publishers of Elgar's 'Salut d'amour' are Messrs. Schott & Co.; Messrs. Ascherberg & Co. issue 'The broken melody.'

INTERESTED.—An obituary notice of Dr. E. H. Turpin appeared in our issue of November, 1907, p. 722.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause. other cause.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.-STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

lated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table, 'The Denial, 'The Condemnation before Pilate, 'The Mockery on Calvary, 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinar congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work wis. undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line sacred composition. "Musical Standard.

EXTRACT FROM PREFATORY NOTE.

This book has been prepared in order to provide readers who wish to listen to music intelligently, yet without going into technicalities, with a simple and practical guide to musical appreciation written from the listener's rather than from the professional musician's standpoint.

The authors believe that there is at the present moment a genuine need for such a book.

An effort has been made first to present to the reader in genuine need for such a book.

An effort has been made, first, to present to the reader in clear and untechnical language an account of the evolution of musical art from the primitive folk-song up to the symphony of Beethoven; second, to illustrate all the steps of this evolution by carefully chosen musical examples, in the form of short quotations in the text and of complete pieces printed in a supplement; third, to facilitate the study of these examples by means of detailed analysis, measure by measure, in many cases put into the shape of tabular views; and fourth, to mark out the lines of further study by suggesting collateral reading.

TIMES.

It has been revised and, of course, re-scored, but the fact that it bears the Opus No. 1A may indicate that in general plan it is to be considered as really belonging to the composer's childhood. It is very easy to see a great many of the little devices by which the man has improved the boy's work; effective harp passages and points of imitation speak to every hearer of 1907 rather than of 1869, but the freshness of the main ideas, the vivacity of contrast in the last movement between the fairies and the giants, and the pretty thought embodied in the section called "Fairy Pipers," breathe of a boyish imagination. . . The clever "Sun Dance" seems to have walked straight out of Tchaikovsky, and the "Giants" straight out of the "Rheingold"; the resemblance in the former case is no doubt due to the orchestration of the adult composer, but the latter must be another instance of independent invention by two composers. composers.

STANDARD.

STANDARD.

The suite begins with a short overture, and consists of six pieces. The remarkable point about them is that the melodic invention is wonderfully fresh and individual. They are, of course, slight, but in more than one place there is evidence of the skilled musician. Whatever additional effects have been secured by the matured hand and brain of the composer—whose skill in orchestration and colour is one of his chief qualities—the tunes themselves are full of charm and individuality. They show undoubtedly the promise that has been so amply fulfilled by the composer, but they also stand out as among the most fluent and spontaneous melodies that he has ever written.

MORNING POST.

The suite is entitled "The Wand of Youth," and is one of the most charming and graceful efforts imaginable. Dr. Elgar has apparently used only the thematic material of the suite in its early form: its present development and orchestral treatment are that of a master hand. The Elgar of 1869 and the Elgar of to-day harmonise well together. With the adoption of a sane simplicity in the subject-matter, and the same concentration of harmonic power upon such unassuming themes, a perfect style would be provided for the setting to music of a purely child's story like that of "Peter Pan."... The "Sun Dance" and the "Slumber Scene" are particularly distinctive; the one by its rhythmic quaintness, the other by its peculiar appropriateness and the beauty of its orchestration.

DAILY NEWS.

The music of the suite is singularly original, with the exception of an avowed "Old Style" minuet and the Mendelssohnian scherzo manner of the "Sun Dance." The most taking of the six sections is the movement entitled "Fairy Pipers," which has a second subject of haunting beauty. A "Slumber Scene" also foreshadows the Elgar of the "Dorabella" variation in the "Enigma" set. The little suite represents a side of the composer which is not to be detected in his very latest compositions. It rather suggests that he should have long since written a light opera. "The Wand of Youth" may be warmly commended to the attention of conductors of amateur orchestras.

OBSERVER.

OBSERVER.

Leaving the orchestration—which is the result of the composer's matured powers—out of the question, these pleasing and graceful pieces show a melodic invention truly wonderful for a boy of twelve. . . The "Sernemake" and the "Slumber Scene" must be picked out as specially charming and wholly characteristic of the musician who wrote the delicate "Dorabella" variation. These two numbers foreshadow in a remarkable way the gift for pure melody shown in the popular violin piece, "Salut d'Amour," which was one of the first compositions to bring Elgar into prominence.

TRIBUNE.

In Sir Edward Elgar's new suite "The Wand of Youth"—as far as structure and design are concerned, a work in miniature—childlike simplicity and charm march hand in hand with ingenious imagination and consummate knowledge of effect. . . This revised version of one of the composer's earliest works, showing at once the fancy of the boy and the mastery of the man, was excellently played and very well received.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a much more consistent work than one would have expected in the circumstances: some of the movements are full of grace and charm, and all are beautifully scored. The Overture is delightfully fresh and vigorous, and there is piquancy and originality in the "Sun Dance," especially in the orchestration of the latter part: while the final movement, "Giants and Fairies," has a great deal of fancy and fine swing. . . The suite, as a whole, will be a welcome addition to the répertoire.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The work has both the exhilaration and the gravity of childhood, and the numbers make a charming sequence. Those one remembers most affectionately are the "Minuet," which shows the young Elgar already under the influence of Bach; the "Sun Dance," which might be the germ of one of the "Enigma" Variations, Nos. 3 or 4, so typical in their delicate remoteness of the later musician, and "Fairies and Giants" in its fine fantastic pomposity.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The seven short movements are very characteristic of the composer, especially in the fanciful orchestration, which is as happily done as anything of the kind from his pen.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

It is interesting to notice how early the characteristic Elgarian idiom seems to have manifested itself, some of the phrases and melodies of the suite being remarkably similar to those which we have long since become familiar with in the composer's later works—and also how little of it is in any marked degree suggestive of other composers or in any way derivative. Elgar was apparently himself from the beginning.

GLOBE.

The "Serenade," the "Sun Dance," "Fairy Pipers," and the "Slumber Scene" are full of dainty fancies charmingly expressed, and the suite ought to become popular.

YORKSHIRE POST.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The themes possess a significance and, in several instances, a charm that, treated with Sir Edward's present resource, result in a most attractive work that will probably become very popular. It opens with a short and energetic Overture, built up with two well-contrasted themes of vivacious character. This prepares the way for an Andantino, a serenade of happy sentiment also possessing attractive melodies. The next number is a Minuet, written in "the olden style"; it is dainty, and charmingly suggestive of tenderness and courteousness. To this succeeds a "Sun Dance," which is replete with exuberant life. It has three subjects, the third of haunting melodiousness. In the next movement, the music becomes more tranquil. It is headed "Fairy Pipers," and there is written in the score, "Two fairy pipers pass in a boat, and charm them to sleep." . . . The piece is delicately scored, but still more subtle effects are produced in the sixth number, a "Slumber Song," played almost entirely pianissimo, and of fascinating dreaminess. The Finale is headed, "Fairies and Giants." . . It begins lightly and softly with a rhythmic theme, which, after brief development, is succeeded by another subject equally gay and attractive. The giants motif is as didactic and heavy as those of the fairies are capricious and captivating, and dramatic interest is thus set up which is defity handled by the composer until a brilliant Coda brings the suite to an effective conclusion.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The pleasing melodies, the freshness and ingenuity of the treatment, and the many happy thoughts in the scoring will commend it to music-lovers. . . . The breezy and melodious overture, the original, impetuous "Sun Dance," the charming "Serenade," and the fanciful and vigorous finale ("Giants and Fairies") are quite worthy of their author, and show that a great composer can make light music valuable. The suite was received very enthusiastically.

INEFFECTUAL PIANO PRACTICE ABOLISHED.

The ability to play the piano and to play it well is latent in all of us. The reason why so many people fail to become more than fair pianists is because they do not study upon plano playing must be brought into action and employed in the correct manner. When this is done, difficulties soon vanish, and a brilliant and finished style of playing is developed. My System of Technique teaches Perject Note Location, Muscular Control and Artistic Keyboard Manipulation by instructions which are as consistently productive of satisfactory results as they are simple to understand and easy to carry out. How this is imparted by a Postal Course of lessons is fully explained in my booklet (A) which will be sent free upon application.

BECKER OCTAVE AND SIXTH GAUGE.

This simple little apparatus eliminates all chances of wrong notes being struck in octave and sixth passages by training the hand to assume and retain automatically the exact octave and sixth span. It is approved and being used by many of the most prominent and highly qualified teachers of the pianoforte.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

'Dear me, said Mr. Grewgious, peeping in, it's like looking down the throat of Old Time.' Charles Dickens in 'The Mystery of Edwin Drood.' The 'peeping in' of Mr. Grewgious was at the west door of the cathedral of Cloisterham (Rochester). Could he have peeped through the ground upon which he was standing, he would have looked down the throat of still older time, upon the foundations of the Saxon church.

Antiquity is a strong characteristic of Rochester. One of the most ancient of English cathedrals, it owes its foundation to King Ethelbert who, very early in the 7th century, built a mother-church, which he dedicated to St. Andrew and arranged that it should be served by a college of secular If little or nothing is known of this early church, the records are full of information as to the poverty and desolation of the see at this period. The bishopric was often left vacant, and Bishop Putta (669-676), finding himself without income, went away into Mercia, and till his death supported himself by teaching music!

was galvanized into fresh life and entered upon a been consecrated four days previously.

new existence. Archbishop I anfranc appointed Gundulf (1076-1108) to the see. Gundulf was a learned man and unwearied in well-doing for the church. He dismissed the secular canons and replaced them by a Benedictine monastery. Moreover, he was a skilful architect. Under his direction the Norman cathedral was begun to be built in the year 1080. It was, as usual, cruciform, with very narrow transepts, a nave of nine bays and a choir of six bays, the choir being separated from the choir aisle by solid walls. There was no tower at the crossing, as at present, but there was one at the east end of the north transept, detached from the main building; it is now a ruin, known as 'Gunduls's tower,' and another tower on the east side of the south transept has gone. Gundulf was succeeded in the bishopric by Ernulf, author of the 'Textus Roffensis,' a collection of important documents relating to the cathedral. Like his distinguished predecessor, Ernulf was an accomplished architect. He partly rebuilt and partly recased the Norman work, and replaced the wooden buildings of the monastery (which stood outside the south wall of the nave) by stone buildings which he erected on the south side of the choir, a very unusual position. Of these buildings only the ruins of the Chapter House and cloisters (See the illustration on p. 157.) remain. finished cathedral was dedicated, in the presence of thirteen bishops, on Ascension Day, May 7, 1130, With the Norman invasion, Rochester Cathedral the neighbouring cathedral of Canterbury having

One of the glories of Rochester is its fine west front, not unlike some continental cathedrals in its ornamentation. (See the illustration on p. 155.) 'The superb western portal at Rochester Cathedral,' says Professor Freeman, 'is by far the finest example of its kind, if not the finest of all Norman doorways.' Although they are much mutilated, the two statues, one on each side of the doorway, called forth high praise from Flaxman. That on the left (looking towards the door) is said to represent King Henry I., that on the right, his wife, the 'good Queen Maud.' 'These effigies,' says Mr. T. F. Bumpus,* 'are two of the oldest statues in the country, and interesting on account of the paucity of examples of Norman sculpture possessed by us. The statue of the king holds a model of a church, which is remarkable on account of its spire; and from the hands of the queen depends a long scroll, the inscription upon which is entirely obliterated. The long hair, plaited and falling over the shoulders, the common fashion of the reign of Henry I., should be especially remarked.'

A dark deed, committed seven hundred years ago, had an important effect on Rochester Cathedral as the building now stands. In the year 1201, a Scotch baker, of Perth, set out to make a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, taking Canterbury on his way in order to visit the shrine of Thomas à Becket. At Rochester, William of Perth was murdered—but the story shall be told by William Lambarde, who, in his 'Perambulation of Kent' (1576), says that he derived the account from the 'Nova Legenda' itself:

He was by birth, a Scot, of Perthe (nowe commonly called Saint Johns Towne), by trade of life a Baker of bread and thereby got his living: in charitie so abundant, that he gave to the poore the tenthe loafe of his workemanship: in zeale so fervent, that in vowe he promised, and in deede attempted, to visite the holy land (as they called it) and the places where Christ was conversant on earth: in whiche journey, as he passed through Kent, he made Rochester his way, where, after that he had rested two or three dayes he departed toward Canterbury. But ere he had gone farre from the Citie, his servant that waited on him led him (of purpose) out of the high way, and spoiled him both of his money and life. This done, the servant escaped, and the Maister (bicause he died in so holy a purpose of minde) was by the Monkes conveied to Saint Andrewes, (and) laide in the quyre.

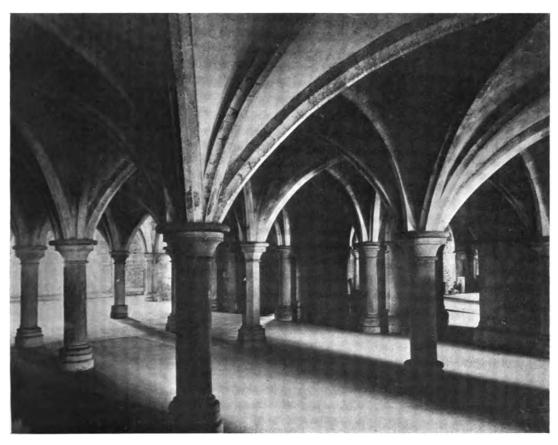

'Saint Andrewes' in the above quotation is, of course, the cathedral of Rochester. As already stated, William, the Scotch baker of Perth, was murdered in 1201, and soon afterwards he was believed to have 'moalded miracles plentifully' at his tomb. Although he was not canonised until 1266, so great were the oblations at his shrine that with the proceeds Prior William de Hoo was enabled to rebuild the whole choir east of the Norman transept. The earliest central tower—one stage, with a wooden spire—was erected in 1343, rebuilt in 1749 and 1830; in 1904, through the generosity of one of Rochester's respected citizens, Mr. Thomas Hellyar Foord, the spire was rebuilt at a cost of £5,000 on the lines of the one that had been debased in 1749.

The illustrations will serve to tell the story of the architecture of the building, but a few features of special note may be pointed out. On entering the cathedral at the west door and descending four steps into the nave, one is struck by the magnificent Norman arches of the first six bays, especially in the great contrast they form to the Early Decorated seventh and eighth bays (airca 1250) which complete the nave eastwards. transition from the rounded arches to the pointed style is specially noticeable in the increased height of the arches, which involved the discontinuance of the triforium; moreover, the two piers at the junctions of the old and newer styles do not pair. It will be observed that the Purbeck marble shafts of the two tower piers are stopped some distance from the ground, probably because a solid stone screen, or rood loft, formerly stood there. Against it the parish altar of St. Nicholas was placed, for in olden times the nave of the cathedral served as the parish church, the monks using the choir for their devotions; this arrangement lasted until 1423, when the church of St. Nicholas, situated on the north side of the cathedral, was built for the use of the parishioners.

And what shall be said of the beautiful serves as part of the Lady Chapel, which is crypt at Rochester? The western half of Gundulf's therefore on the south side of the nave of the undercroft remains, the rest belongs to the Early church. The choir is reached by ascending ten English church. One thing about the choir of Rochester makes it unique among English cathedrals—it is entirely enclosed, except the opening caused by the divided organ case, designed by Sir Gilbert Scott in 1875. From the photograph on p. 153 it will be seen that the walls above the stalls entirely enclose the choir on its north and south sides, and therefore that the choir aisles are also walled off.

Fortune, pictured as a queen, is robed in yellow, and regulates the movement of her wheel, of the same colour, with her right hand. It is interesting to trace the changes in the dress of the other figures. At her feet a man, plainly clad in a dark red gown, with green stockings and black shoes, is trying to gain a position on the wheel. Above this poor struggling one we see one who has risen half-way to the summit, and whose attire is correspondingly richer. His gown is a little lighter in colour, and has a hood to seated the present favourite, richly arrayed in a full robe of red turned up with white, with furs round his neck, a white belt and green hose. He looks toward the missing half of the picture, where others were no doubt represented as falling or fallen from the high place that he now holds, and his countenance seems to express mingled satisfaction and inquietude.*

The majority of the monuments are not of is the reputed shrine of St. William of Perth. Walter de Merton (d. 1277). In the year 1598 it was opened, and the chalice taken from the coffin and treasured at the college he founded at Oxford.

THE WHEEL OF FORTUNE: A FRESCO ON THE NORTH WALL OF THE CHOIR. (Reproduced, by permission, from 'Rochester' in ' Bell's Cathedral Series.')

An effigy of the bishop in the next bay is remarkable for its anachronisms: it has recently been replaced upon his tomb. Under the central window at the end of the south nave transept Harris, a prebendary of the cathedral, at that is a monument to Richard Watts, M.P., erected to time preparing his 'History of Kent,' published in his memory by the mayor and citizens in 1736, 1719. The precious manuscript went to London This citizen of Rochester, who had the honour of by water, and on its return journey to Rochester it entertaining Queen Elizabeth at his house in 1573, is famous for his foundation of the 'House for the 6 poor travellers, not being rogues or proctors' match; his sleeves are yellow, his stockings green, and his who are there (at Rochester) provided with shoes ornamented. At the top is proudly and comfortably supper, bed, and breakfast, in addition to a dole of fourpence when they leave. Underneath the Watts monument is a brass to the memory of Charles Dickens-who died at Gad's Hill, three miles from the city, on June 6, 1870—placed by his executors 'to connect his memory with the scenes in which his earliest and latest years were passed, and with the associations of Rochester Cathedral and its neighbourhood which extended supreme importance. In the north choir transept over all his life.' Had not the great novelist been buried in Westminster Abbey, his remains would Close by is the sumptuous tomb of Bishop in all probability have found a resting place in the cathedral so closely associated with his memory. From a pictorial point of view there may be mentioned the tombs of Bishops Gilbert de Glanvill (died 1214), Lawrence de Saint Martin (died 1274), and John de Sheppey (died 1360), the last-named on the north side of the choir.

No account, however limited in scope, of Rochester Cathedral would be complete without reference to one of its most beautiful architectural features—the doorway of the Chapter House. One of the finest examples of English Decorated in existence, it dates from about the middle of the 14th century. The photograph on p. 154 shows two female figures at the sides of the doorone holding a cross in her right hand and the model of a church in her left; the other, the blindfolded 'Synagogue,' with her broken staff in the left hand, and the tables of the law held reversed in her right hand, typifying the overthrow of the Mosaic dispensation. The figures, two on each side of the doorway, seated at desks under canopies, will not escape observation: they are supposed to represent the four great doctors of the church, Saints Augustine, Gregory, Jerome, and Ambrose. The present door, quite unworthy of its lovely setting, is due to Cottingham (1825), who actually transformed the female figure on the left into a mitred, bearded bishop! Thanks to Miss Louisa Twining this vandalism of that ill-fated architect was, in 1897, corrected by the placing of a woman's head on the figure.

The chief treasure in the cathedral library is the Textus Roffensis, a manuscript said to be the work of Bishop Ernulf, and therefore dating from early in the 12th century. It contains old English codes of law, beginning with Ethelbert's, in addition to forms of excommunication, oaths. customs and privileges of the cathedral, and general historical information: in fact, this ancient tome is one of the chief authorities on early ecclesiastical history. The book has had some narrow escapes of being lost, its most serious mishap being in 1712, when it was sent to Dr. John fell into the Thames. Fortunately the volume was recovered not much the worse for immersion, and was afterwards re-bound. Scarcely less interesting is the MS. entitled, Custumale Roffense (per fratum I. de Westerham).

work of a monk, afterwards a prior, it dates from about the year 1300, and treats of the lands belonging to the priory and the duties of the office-holders of the house; it also gives some details about the Rome-scot. Many books details about the Rome-scot. formerly on the shelves have become scattered at various times, including the famous Gundulf Bible, all traces of which were lost between the time of a number of bishops and earls.

the Suppression of the Monastery till the year 1734, when it was sold at Amsterdam, then being in the possession of a clergyman, Herman Van de Wall. On the subsequent return to England of the volume it passed, in 1827, into the famous collection of Sir Thomas Phillipps for £189. The Bibles now on the shelves include that of Miles Coverdale, the first complete edition in English (1535); Cranmer's rare and valuable Great Bible, printed under Cromwell's patronage(1539); and one of the first editions of Parker's, or the Bishop's Bible (1565). To the foregoing must be added the first famous Polyglot known as the Complutensian, that magnificent undertaking of the Cardinal-statesman Ximenes upon which he spent the sum of half a million ducats. The work was printed at Alcala, in Spain, between 1502 and 1517, but not published until 1522. Here is also the London Polyglot of Brian Walton (6 vols., London, 1654-57), containing the Bible, or parts of it, in nine languages.

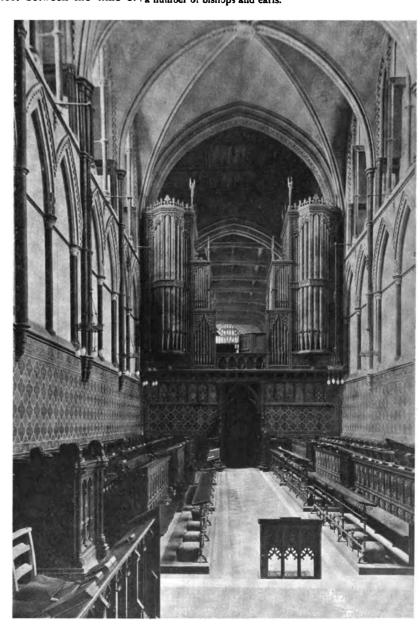

The Rev. J. Harvey Bloom, M.A., rector of Whitchurch, Stratfordon-Avon, has recently completed the work of examining and classifying the various charters, rolls, parchments, &c., contained in the Cathedral muniment room. To quote from an article contributed by him to the Rochester Journal of February 7:

In the collection of Royal Charters are two of Henry I., one of which bears the crosses of Henry and Matilda, Archbishop Anselm, Gundulph, and other distinguished great ones of their time. It is exciting indeed to an antiquary to find suddenly, among comparatively modern rubbish, such a parchment. I take it these crosses attesting the witnesses' names were no sign that the authors could not write, but were rather a survival from the Saxon land books, which gave a special sanctity to the translation.

Another charter of interest, is that of Stephen, confirming the dotation of previous kings, and attested, like the last, by

THE CHOIR, LOOKING WEST. (Photograph by Mr. G. A. Morris, Rochester.)

Passing by those of later kings, I find among charters of bishops, the original foundation charter of the Cathedral, that of the famous builder Gundulf, granting the churches of Wulewic, Darenteford, Aeileford, etc., etc., to his new foundation. Hamon, Sheriff of Kent, and many abbots and knights attest his gift .

Yet another charter [of confirmation] is of a grant be Ernulf de Certrifelt and Agnes his wife, which has still his fine equestrian seal attached, and is dated between 1142-49.

Mr. Bloom goes on to say that:

There are several deeds here with almost perfect seals of the early defenders of the Castle [Rochester], under the title of either Arbulastor or Ballistarius.

Another long series of great interest is that connected with the Priory of Austin Canons of Ledes, including no less than five royal charters, with the seals more or less perfect of Richard Cœur de Lion; but probably the finest single document in the whole collection is the great deed of exchange between Hubert de Walter, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Gilbert, Bishop of Rochester, which has appended a number of extremely interesting seals, including a perfect specimen of that of Richard I. tied to the seal of Hubert.

THE CHAPTER HOUSE DOORWAY. (Photograph by Mr. G. A. Morris, Rochester.)

After describing other ancient documents, Mr. Bloom—who is to be warmly congratulated upon the thoroughness and success of his important work—says:

In conclusion, may I add that the value of these papers, rolls, and parchments is very great. They throw a flood of light upon the places and people they deal with, show the condition of the foreshore of the Thames, speak of customs and manners long since passed away, and trace the devout and charitable behests of the good people of Rochester, Chatham, and Strood from the eleventh century to the oresent day.

No better introduction to the consideration of the organs could be found than the following extract from 'The Mystery of Edwin Drood' Not only does it refer to Rochester Cathedral, but the lines are among the last that Charles Dickens wrote; indeed, he penned them within a few hours of his death:

A brilliant morning shines on the old city. Its antiquities and ruins are surpassingly beautiful, and a lusty ivy gleaming in the sun, and the rich trees waving in the balmy air. Changes of glorious light from moving boughs, songs of birds, scents from gardens, woods, and fields—or, rather, from the one great garden of the whole cultivated island in its yielding time—penetrate into the Cathedral, subdue its earthy odour, and preach the Resurrection and the Life. The cold stone tombs of centuries ago grow warm; and flecks of brightness dart into the sternest marble corners of the building, fluttering there like wings.

Comes Mr. Tope [chief Verger and Showman], with his large keys, and yawningly unlocks and sets open. Come Mrs. Tope and attendant sweeping sprites. Come, in due time, organist and bellows-boy, peeping down from the red curtains in the loft, fearlessly flapping dust from books up at that remote elevation, and whisking it from stops and pedals. Come sundry rooks, from various quarters of the sky, back to the great tower; who may be presumed to enjoy vibration, and to know that bell and organ are going to give it them.

As in other English cathedrals, very little is known of the earliest organs at Rochester. Bishop Gilbert de Glanvill, who was consecrated in 1185, presented an instrument to the church, and in the next century, during the terrible visitation of Simon de Montfort's troops, the 'organs were raised in the voice of weeping. 1621 there was a payment to Mr. Ward for repairing the organ, and in 1637 the sum of £2 was paid to 'Payne for blowing the organs' and a similar amount 'to Mr. Burward, the organ maker, his fee.' Between those two dates, in 1634, the Dean and Chapter expended on the fabric and 'making of the organs' the sum of 'more than £1,000. It was in this year (1634) that a visitor to the cathedral recorded: 'her organs, though small, yet are they rich and neat; her quiristers, though but few, yet orderly and decent.' instrument was probably silent during Commonwealth, but it was soon heard again after the Restoration, for Mr. Pepys tells us, under date of April 10, 1661, 'Then to Rochester, which is now fitting for use, and the organ then a-tuning.'

In 1668 Father Smith appeared on the scene, when he was paid £167 'for the repayre of ye old organ and a new choyre organ.' Nine years later the following payment is recorded in the cathedral accounts:

1677. Sep. 15. To Mr. B. Smith, ye organ maker, the moiety of the money agreed upon for the putting in of one ffurniture stopp into ye Greate organ and one flute stopp into ye Choyre organ and for cleaning of both £10.

For several years this master-craftsman was paid the sum of \pounds_4 , this disbursement being 'a yeares sallary due to him for mending, cleanyng and tuneing ye organ.'

After the death of Father Smith *--which took place on February 20, 1708—there seem to have been some financial differences between Mrs. Smith and the Dean and Chapter, judging from copies of two letters preserved among the cathedral muniments. They were written by John Spaine, the organist, evidently to Gerard Smith, nephew of the celebrated organ-builder. By kind permission of the Dean we are enabled to give these letters and other documents relating to the old organs. Mr. Spaine's communications speak for themselves:

Green's organ—described by Dr. E. J. Hopkins as a 'beautifully-toned instrument'—was enlarged and renovated at various times by various builders.

In 1905 the organ was entirely rebuilt by Messrs. J. W. Walker & Sons to the following specification, the stops marked * and the whole of the constructional parts and the mechanism being new:

Rochester has been famous for its choristers. The Statutes given by Henry VIII. in 1536 were most favourable to them and their master. The latter was to have a larger salary than the second master in the Grammar School, and, with a carefully defined subordination of rank, to have his place at a higher table. The choristers were to dine at the same common table with the Grammar School boys, but to receive a more valuable stipend, and they were to have the invariable preference of admission to the Upper School. At the present time the choristers are town boys who, however, are educated at their own school under the shadow of the cathedral: the master is the Rev. Hamilton S. Cobb, precentor of the cathedral.

Six former choristers of Rochester have achieved fame as cathedral organists: their names, given in chronological order, are these: Dr. H. E. Ford, Carlisle (a chorister at Rochester nearly eighty years ago!); the late Dr. Armes, Durham; the late Dr. E. J. Crow, Ripon; Sir Frederick Bridge, Westminster Abbey; Dr. D. J. Wood, Exeter; and Dr. J. C. Bridge, Chester. To these must be added the late Joseph Maas, the distinguished tenor singer, to whose memory a marble medallion portrait has been placed in the cathedral by his widow. Mr. Armes and Mr. Bridge, the respective and respected fathers of two of the above-named boys, were lay-clerks in the cathedral at the time of their sons' choristerships.

The task of compiling a roll of the organists has been made quite easy through the researches of Mr. Thomas Shindler, M.A., I.L.B., Registrar of the Royal College of Organists, as demonstrated in his 'The Registers of the Cathedral Church of Rochester (1657-1837),' a privately printed book issued in 1892. James Plomley held the organistship in 1559, being mentioned in a Patent of that date as 'Organist and Teacher of the Children.' The Patent is to Peter Rowle, to feed, lodge, and clothe the choristers after the death of Plomley. In 1588 Roper Blundell, a minor canon, was appointed to the office of 'Master of the Coristers followed, in 1753, by Joseph Howe, who seems to Service by him in the Peterhouse collection, Cambridge. According to the Treasurer's books, Charles Wren was organist in 1672; and seven years later the Dean and Chapter ordered that 'the sum of ten shillings be given to Popeley to incourage him in his learning to play upon the organ.' Was Popeley a chorister? And was he not afterwards organist of Southwell Minster?

Daniel Henstridge, afterwards organist of Canterbury Cathedral, held office for twenty-four years, from 1674. A quarter's salary (£12 10s.), paid in 1676, gives us the amount of his emoluments. To him succeeded Robert Bowers, to whom, in 1701, the Dean and Chapter gave 'leave to goe into ye country for a month and that Mr. Spaine doe officiate for him.' Mr. Spaine not only officiated for Henstridge, but became his successor. It was during the régime of Charles Peach (1721-53) that the present organist's house was built in 1735, the estimate for which is preserved in the Chapter muniments. Peach was of Ralph Banks. Canon Jebb, in his 'The Choral Service of the United Church of England and Ireland' (p. 122, note), records that at the time of Banks's appointment, in 1791, the prayers were read, not chanted, by the minor canons. This is confirmed by an entry, made by Banks, in an organ book belonging to the cathedral, in which he says: 'When I came from Durham to this Cathedral in 1791, only one Lay Clerk attended during each week. The Canticles (in the weekday services) were chanted. Two services (Aldrich in G and Rogers in D) and seven anthems had been in rotation on Sundays for twelve years!!! R. B.'

Banks died suddenly during the night of September 20, 1841, at the age of seventy-four, according to his tombstone in the nave. The Maidstone Journal of Tuesday, September 21, 1841, under Rochester, thus records the death, but gives his age as seventy-five:

DEATH OF R. BANKS, Esq.—We deeply regret to have to announce the death of this much and widely respected gentleman, yesterday, (Monday morning), aged 75 years, having been organist of Rochester cathedral upwards of half a century. He performed the service on the preceding day (Sunday) in the cathedral, and played Handel's fine chorus 'The Lord gave the word.' Mr. Banks was educated at Durham, and was a sterling musician of the old school. His amiable disposition, and well-stored mind, caused him to be greatly respected by a very wide circle of friends, and we believe by none more so than the Dean and the other clergy of the cathedral in whose service so many years of his life had been spent. Mr. Banks was engaged in preparing an edition of his excellent compositions for publication, for some time prior to his decease.

Mr. Banks, who died of apoplexy, was buried in the nave of the cathedral. Mr. (now Dr.) H. E. Ford, honorary organist of Carlisle Cathedral, presided at the organ on that occasion. Banks was succeeded by Dr. John Larkin Hopkins, composer of a well-known Te Deum in G. Upon his removal to Trinity College, Cambridge, his cousin, John Hopkins, brother of Dr. E. J. Hopkins, was appointed. A tablet to his memory, placed on the north wall of St. Edmund's Chapel, is thus inscribed:

Iohn Hopkins, organist of this cathedral and master of the choristers, 1856-1900. Born 30th April, 1822. Died 27th Avgyst, 1900.

On a scroll is superinscribed the first strain of his hymn-tune, 'Rogate,' set to 'There is a blessed home.'

Mr. Bertram Luard-Selby, the present organist, was born at The Mote, Ightham, Kent, February 12, 1853. He studied at the Leipzig Conservatorium under Reinecke and Jadassohn, and has held the following organistships: St. Barnabas, Marylebone, and Highgate School, 1876; Salisbury Cathedral, 1881; St. John's, Torquay, 1884; St. Barnabas, Pimlico, 1887. He was appointed to Rochester on the death of John Hopkins in 1900.

As a composer Mr. Luard-Selby has covered various fields by his creative gifts. In dramatic music there can be placed to his credit 'Helena in Troas' (London, May 17, 1886), and 'Weather or No,' musical duologue (Savoy Theatre, August 10, 1896). He has also composed two school cantatas, 'The Waits of Bremen,' and 'A Castle in Spain'; also an Idyll for orchestra (Henschel Concerts, March 11, 1897). His chamber music includes two Pianoforte quintets, a Pianoforte quartet, three Sonatas for violin and pianoforte, in addition to songs and part-songs. To church music he has contributed several Services—in A, F, C, B, a festival setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in A, composed for the Gloucester Musical Festival of 1901, and another in C, composed for the Salisbury Diocesan Choral Festival in 1899. He has also composed a number of pieces for the organ.

Mr. Hector E. Shallcross, the sub-organist of the cathedral, has held that office for five years concurrently with the organistship of the Parish Church of St. Margaret's, Rochester. An excellent organist—he obtained his first appointment at the early age of thirteen—Mr. Shallcross rendered valuable service last year as local secretary for the Kent County musical competition festival.

The writer desires to thank the following for kind help in the preparation of this article: Mr. George Payne, F.S.A., Mr. Thomas Shindler, M.A., LL.B., Registrar of the Royal College of Organists, and Mr. B. Luard-Selby, Organist and Master of the Choristers of Rochester Cathedral; also the photographers whose names are given under their respective illustrations.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

CHERUBINI IN ENGLAND.

Luigi Carlo Zenobi Salvatore Maria Cherubini -to give his full name—was born in Florence, September 14, 1760, and died at Paris, March 15, 1842. His industrious life of eighty-two years covered an interesting period in the history of To quote Sir George Macfarren: 'His singularly long career of activity comprised a great epoch in musical history, during which the art passed through some of its most important changes. He was busy as a composer before Mozart was otherwise acknowledged than as a youthful prodigy, and after Verdi had founded his reputation. He witnessed the beginning and the end of Beethoven's labours, and of those of Weber, Rossini, and Boieldieu.' Macfarren goes on to say: 'He was still more distinguished by the opinion of his fellow-artists and the esteem of the world. Beethoven wrote to him in terms of respect; and the father of Mendelssohn took the boy to Paris for Cherubini to decide whether his indications of merit warranted his dedication to the study of music.' In regard to Cherubini's creative career, the Professor adds: 'He composed a Mass with success before he was thirteen, and composed a string quartet when he was seventy-seven, and even this was followed by some other though smaller pieces'—a truly remarkable man.

Cherubini had just entered upon the twenty-fifth year of his life when he paid his first visit to England. How came he to receive an invitation to become 'composer for the Italian Theatre' in London? His English biographer, Mr. Edward Bellasis,* says that 'it was through the connection of Sarti (Cherubini's master) with England, where his (Sarti's) operas at this period found acceptance, and thanks also to the reputation already acquired, that Cherubini had received an invitation to visit London professionally.' But is it not probable that Earl Cowper (George Nassau Clavering, the third Earl) may have had some influence in causing Cherubini to set foot on our shores? The Earl, who had lived many years in Italy, was intensely fond of music. For him Cherubini wrote two vocal duets with accompaniments for two 'cors d'amour,' and the connection of the English aristocracy then, as now, with Italian Opera may have contributed in some degree to the engagement of the young Florentine composer. At all events he arrived in London in September, 1784.

Cherubini's first creative achievement here appears to have been six pieces which he composed for a pasticcio, produced at the King's Theatre, Haymarket, on January 22 (not 21, as stated by Mr. Bellasis), 1785. The Public Advertiser of that date announced, 'This Day will be presented a Serious Opera in two Acts, called Demetrio. The music selected from the most eminent By and under the direction of Sig. Composers. Cherubini.' Parke, the oboist, in his gossiping says: 'Cherubini, 'Musical Memoirs,' selected and composed this opera, was a scholar of Sarti; he was a young man of genius, and the overture and the duet in the third Act, gave promise of future greatness.' The next event of Cherubinic importance was thus announced in the Public Advertiser of Saturday, April 2, 1785. 'At the King's Theatre, Hay-market, will be performed an entirely new Comic Opera, in two Acts, entituled La Finta Principessa, the Music being the first Essay of Sig. Cherubini in this Country. The same journal criticised the 'Essay' in the following terms:

This Burletta, which we doubt not may be, as it is said it is, the 'first essay of Cherubini in this department of his art,' makes a large addition to his professional fame.

Most of the music is pretty; much is eminently so—the first, and yet more, the second air of Franchi, are as fanciful—excel in the power of pleasing, more than anything since the time of Sacchini.

Judging by its repetitions during the season, 'La Finta Principessa,' Cherubini's ninth opera, achieved success. It is interesting to notice that Gluck's 'Orpheus' was also performed at this time (Did Cherubini conduct it?), the advertisements announcing it as 'The music by Sir Christopher Gluck, with the additions of the celebrated John Christ. Bach.' According to Burney 'In the summer [1785] the whole opera machine came to pieces, and all its springs, disordered by law suits, warfare, and factions, were not collected and regulated till the next year.' Verily, verily, the sea of operatic enterprise is a very stormy one. Who shall estimate its wrecks?

After a visit to Paris, Cherubini returned to England (his second visit) in October, 1785. For the performance of Paisiello's 'Il Marchese Tulipano'—on January 21, 1786—he inserted six airs of his own composition. Parke says that Signor Babbini, the celebrated tenor, and Signora Sestini both made their first appearances here in this opera 'under the direction of Cherubini.' He adds: Babbini possessed a pleasing voice and In the beautiful air sang with great taste. 'Madamina' he was greatly applauded. air, one of those composed by Cherubini, in its English version, 'For tenderness formed,' was afterwards introduced by Mrs. Crouch, the famous There is very little doubt that actress and singer. these six interpolated pieces did not detract from 'the admirable melodies of Paisiello.'

Cherubini was unfortunate in his serious opera 'Giulio Sabino,' the libretto by Metastasio. It was first performed, at the King's Theatre, on March 30, 1786, for the benefit of Signora Ferrarese del Bene, the sobriquet of Francesca Gabrielli, an Italian singer who probably owed her good fortune to her pretty eyes and mouth rather than to her vocal charms. The opera was announced as 'never performed' and 'the music entirely new.' Burney, writing under date of 1787, says: 'Cherubini, the nominal composer of the Opera this year, was a young man of genius, who had no opportunity while he was Cherubini: Memorials illustrative of his life. By Edward Bellasis. Second and enlarged edition. Birmingham: Cornish Brothers, Limited. 1905.

own country, where he is now travelling fast to the temple of Fame. His opera "Giulio Sabino" was murdered at its birth for want of the necessary support of capital singers in the principal parts; Babbini, the tenor, being elevated to first man, and the Ferrarese, first woman, were circumstances not likely to prejudice the public in favour of the composer.'* The work seems to have been only once performed and the composer, annoyed at the failure of his serious opera, lest London accompanied by Babbini. 'I quitted England,' he writes, 'and came to Paris and established myself there.

At the end of the summer holidays (1786) Cherubini came to England for the third time. Mr. Bellasis says that he returned 'to fulfil his engagement as King's musician for 1787.' But that surely must be a mistake; it probably means that Cherubini was 'Musician to the King's Theatre,' a very different post from that at Court. On January 13, 1787, was first performed a comic opera entitled 'Giannina e Bernardone,' composed by Cimarosa, 'in which,' according to Burney, 'many songs were introduced by Cherubini.' The opera itself, however, was performed under the direction of Signor Mazzinghi.

This concludes what may be termed the operatic visits of Cherubini to England. His English biographer tells us that 'his reputation admitted him to the society of the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., who was delighted with his talent and agreeable voice. The Prince was fond of singing, and Cherubini sang at the royal amateur's réunions, as well as at those of William, fourth Duke of Queensberry, who had a particular affection for our composer.' In stating, in one of the Crystal Palace programme-books, that Cherubini assisted at the Handel Commemoration held in May and June, 1784, in Westminster Abbey, Sir George Grove must have had in mind one of the subsequent performances there (1785, 6 and 7), as the subject of this article did not arrive in England until the autumn of 1784.

Twenty-eight years elapsed between the official visit of 1787 and the next, in 1815. In the meantime he had settled in Paris and immensely increased his reputation by the operas Lodoïska, Medée, Les deux journées (known in Germany as Der Wasserträger), Anacréon, Faniska, Les Abencerages (his twenty-fourth opera), in addition to other works of importance. The Philharmonic Society, then in its infancy, had not only given Cherubini the place of honour at their first concert-March 8, 1813-by placing his Anacréon overture at the head of the programme, but overtures and other pieces by him, besides vocal solos, found a place in six other concerts of this initial season. Moreover, at a general meeting of the Society held on December 28, 1814, it was proposed by his fellow-countryman, Muzio Clementi (who had then been domiciled in England for forty-eight years), seconded by François Cramer, and carried by a majority of eight against six votes, that the sum of £200 should be offered to Cherubini for the composition of a symphony, an overture, and a concerted vocal piece to Italian words. Cherubini, whose reputation at that time was second only to that of Beethoven, accepted the commission and the invitation—which it may be presumed accompanied the financial proposal and lest Paris on February 25, 1815, for London. According to the diary he kept during this visit his compositions were as follows:

Overture composed in Paris in February [1815] and completed in March in London for the Philharmonic Concerts; Symphony composed in London for the said concerts, commenced in March and finished 24th April; Inno alla primavera, four parts, with instruments, composed in London for the same concerts, begun the 8th May, finished 19th of the same; Air, in English, composed in London for Mdme. Chinnery, towards the end of May.

With regard to the 'Inno alla primavera' above mentioned, Mr. Bellasis gives a letter from Cherubini addressed to Mr. S. Vestri, 6, Rupert Street, Haymarket, on the subject of the words. The letter, in Italian, although undated, is evidently of the year 1815: it reads, in its translated form:

Most esteemed Signor Vestri,—Well, I shall expect your work to-morrow without fail. I hope you will do me the favour of coming to me, or of letting me know whether I am to go to you. I warm you that I shall be unable to wait longer for those words, as the Philharmonic Concerts are going to conclude, and this piece must be ready for the last, which will take place shortly.

Believe me, as I have the pleasure of signing myself, your affectionate friend and servant, L. CHERUBINI.

Cherubini made his first appearance at the Philharmonic Society at the third concert of the third season, March 13, 1815. The programme may be given in full.

It will be observed that the Beethoven symphony was not specified. The first time any one of the 'immortal nine' could be identified in the Philharmonic programmes was on April 14, 1817, in No. 6, called 'Sinfonia Pastorale.'

Between the third and the fourth concert Cherubini recounted his London doings in the following letter to his wife:

London, March 22, 1815. Last Saturday I dined at the house of Mr. Broadwood (the supposed future husband of Victorine as Ciceri says)* with Erard's son who was one of the party We had an excellent dinner, and were a long time over it. Among the party, besides Erard, there were Cramer, Hullmandel, and others whom you do not know. On leaving, I went to finish my evening at the Opera, where I felt thoroughly wearied, so bad was it . . .

^{* &#}x27;A general history of music.' By Charles Burney. 1789. Vol. iv., p. 527.

Do not be afraid, my dear, of writing at too great length. I am too eager for your letters and for news about you not to relish them deliberately, however long they may be. I have no patience to read long epistles from those for whom I do not care, but I take a pleasure in perusing from beginning to end those of persons whom I cherish.

I am now in the midst of dinner parties and society, where I am very well received and petted. The day before yesterday I went to a grand dinner given me by Braham, the best singer in London, and husband of Madame Storace, whose portrait you saw at that good creature Haydn's. The dinner was given with several directors of the Philharmonic Concerts. H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, one of the King's sons, a great musical amateur, very affable, and altogether a good fellow, was present. He would have me placed next him at table, and was exceedingly amiable. We drank like fishes, and remained three hours and a half at table. At ten o'clock we had coffee; we then played whist, and left at half-past twelve

As for my benefit [concert] we will arrange it the best way we can, and I will be guided by the advice of the amico; we must not expect a very large profit, so that we may not be disappointed. With regard to the day before Whitsuntide, that must already be taken. By dint of thinking on what day I can give my concert I have only been able to obtain the Grand Chamberlain's permission for 24th April. I think that if the place is full at half a guinea each—and that price cannot be increased without making people cry out-the receipts will amount to 250 or 300 guineas, from which must be deducted the unavoidable expenses. It is better to give the concert in the Philharmonic Rooms than in the Opera House concert-room, which is much larger, and would drag me into greater expenses. Whatever the concert may bring me in will be so much profit, and many a mickle makes a muckle. If, at the end of my visit, I give Le Mont St. Bernard at the Opera House, I think I shall make £700, or a little more. That should be in French money about 14,000 francs.*

I will now conclude this letter, my dear, Adieu, I embrace you tenderly, and do the same to the children. My best remembrances to the ladies, all our friends, and especially my dear Méhul.

Adieu, my dear, I am as good as gold

Ever and wholly yours

L. CHERUBINI.

At the end of Act I. of the fourth Philharmonic concert—April 3, 1815—was played one of the commissioned works, thus described in the programme:

Overture, MS., never performed, composed expressly for this Society, at which MR. CHERUBINI will preside - - Cherubini.

At the same concert the Terzetto 'Et incarnatus est,' from his Mass in F, was sung by Mrs. Lacy, Messrs. Reyes, and C. Smith. Another letter from the composer to his wife, written in London, may be partly quoted:

London, 7th April, 1815.

Last Monday they played my new Overture (in G) at the Philharmonic Concert; it was very successful and they had it over again. They also sang the 'Incarnatus est' from the three-part Mass, and that also had to be repeated. Despite this success, I foresee that my journey here will be a failure; I expect hardly any profit from it. We have reckoned up the expenses, and they come to 100 guineas. If I have not a full house, I risk, after taking a great deal of trouble, gaining only fifty guineas, if, indeed, I am not something out of pocket. Money runs away here like water, and the slightest things are proportionately dear. The outlay will amount to so much, since I shall not be able to have more than three parts of the band without paying them. There is no longer any idea of the opera of "Eliza"; this is why I consider my journey a failure, and, had I foreseen such a result, I should certainly not have undertaken it, for I should at least have received in Paris the net sum of £200 which, as things now stand, is broken in upon and pledged for my travelling and my living here. All this clouds my soul, and I am so affected by it, so sad, that, with the work I am obliged to do, if I do not fall ill it will be a miracle. Already my health, which up to now has been good, is becoming bad; for several days my nerves have been ill, and I suffer from a melancholy which I cannot overcome. All this troubles, consumes, and wears me away.

Adieu, my dear, I leave you, for my head aches a great

Adieu, my dear, I leave you, for my head aches a great deal in writing this letter, though I take a pleasure in doing so. I embrace you tenderly, as well as my children. Best compliments to the ladies and to my friends.

Ever yours L. CHERUBINI.

The concert referred to in the letter of March 22 did not take place until April 24, when it was thus advertised in the Morning Chronicle:

Argyll Rooms—Mr. CHERUBINI most respectfully acquaints the Nobility, Gentry, and his Friends in general, that his CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms this evening—The following eminent Instrumentalists and Vocal Performers have kindly offered their assistance: Mrs. Bianchi Lacy, Miss Griglietti and Madame Marconi; Mr. Braham, Mr. Ledesma, Mr. Graham, Mr. Lacy, Mr. Le Vasseur and Mr. Naldi; Mr. F. Cramer, Mr. Vaccari, Mr. Spagnoletti, Mr. Mori, Mr. Rosquellas, Mr. Lindley and Mr. Kalkbrenner. The Orchestra will be numerous, and complete in every department, and will be assisted by a full Chorus.

In the course of the evening will be performed for the first time a new MS. Overture, composed by Mr. Cherubini; together with some Selections from an entirely new Mass, for numerous voices, by the same Composer—Messrs. Mori, Rosquellas and Lindley will perform a Sinfonia Concertante by Viotti; and Mr. Kalkbrenner a Fantasia on the Piano Forte. Leader, Mr. F. Cramer. Piano Forte Mr. Cherubini—To begin at eight o'clock precisely.

Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had of Mr. Cherubini, No. 10, Charles Street, Manchester-square; of Messrs. Chappell & Co., New Bond-street; Mr. Birchall, New Bond-street; Messrs. Monzani & Hill, Dover-street; Messrs. Clementi & Co., Cheapside, and 1, Argyll Rooms.

No notice seems to have been taken of this concert, the musical critic having apparently no existence at that time. At the fifth Philharmonic concert (April 17) the overture 'Les deux journées' was performed; and at the sixth (May 1) Act II. opened with:

Sinfonia MS. (never performed), composed expressly for this society - - - Cherubini.

No mention is made of the composer having 'presided' at his Sinfonia. Mr. Viotti was the leader on that occasion, and Mr. Cramer was at the pianoforte, the conductor, now often too much in evidence, being then unknown in England. The score of the symphony—entirely in the composer's autograph and preserved in the Society's library—is inscribed 'composed for the Philharmonic Concert in London, 1815.' The work—classed by Macfarren 'as abstract, not as illustrative music'—does not seem to have been a great success. Except at a performance at Vienna, it has probably not found a place in other than there being Philharmonic programmes, performances in all—in 1815, May 2, 1853 (under Costa), February 29, 1864 (under Bennett), and March 16, 1870 (under Cusins). Cherubini subsequently arranged the symphony as a string quartet: in so doing he transposed the music from D to C, and substituted a new Lento (in A minor) At the last for the original Larghetto cantabile. concert of the season the overture performed at his own music-making was played. On June 12 he was elected an Associate, and a week later a member of the Philharmonic Society. Although he has recorded his election as an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music (London), his name does not appear in the current official list of 'Deceased Honorary Members,' while his contemporaries, Liszt, Meyerbeer, Moscheles and Mendelssohn are therein given.

This, Cherubini's fifth and last visit to England, covered a greater part of the Hundred Days. He left London on June 3, at half-past five in the evening, and, travelling all night, reached Dover at nine the next morning! As 'the wind was extremely high,' and the crossing occupied fifteen hours, it is no wonder that Cherubini was ill. The Channel tortures may have influenced him in not venturing to cross the silver streak again, for, so far as is known, he did not re-visit this country during the remaining twenty-seven years of his life.

The portrait of Cherubini forming one of the special supplements of the present issue, is from the fine oil-painting by the eminent French artist, Jean Dominique Auguste Ingres. It is one of his finest works, and has now found a worthy place in the Louvre, Paris. According to Pougin it was begun in 1837 at Rome and finished, at Paris, in 1842, the year of the composer's death. Hiller speaks of the picture as 'not so much painted, as actually chiselled in colours.' Cherubini showed his appreciation of the picture by composing for Ingres, the artist, a canon, of which he wrote both the words and the music; it was probably the swan-song of the distinguished composer.

The facsimile signature which appears under the portrait is from a letter kindly lent by Mr. Arthur F. Hill, written by Cherubini to Dragonetti, and dated Paris, October 10, 1825.

Dr. Philip Armes, we regret to record, died at Durham on February 10, aged seventy-one years. As a biographical sketch, with special portrait, of this much-esteemed musician appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1900, there is no need to repeat the details of his long and useful life. He retired from the organistship of Durham Cathedral, which he had held with distinction for forty-five years, in the spring of 1906, when he was made honorary organist of that venerable fane. Dr. Armes retained till his death that Professorship of Music in the University of Durham to which he was appointed in 1897: he was the first holder of that office.

Occasional Motes.

The harp of the minstrel is untruly touched if his own glory is all that it records.—JOHN RUSKIN.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Arthur James Balfour) is held in high repute as a cultured amateur musician. An interesting sidelight on his love for the art is furnished by Lady Randolph Churchill (Mrs. Cornwallis West) in the fourth instalment of her 'Reminiscences' contributed to the Century Illustrated Magazine for February. Writing on the subject of the Fourth Party—the quartet of Members of Parliament consisting of Mr. Balfour, Sir John Gorst, Sir Henry Drummond Wolf and Lord Randolph Churchill—she says:

'Sir John had a music-loving soul, and many were the occasions when he and I and Arthur Balfour went off to the "Monday Pops" together, to listen to the sweet strains of Joachim and Norman Neruda. My fashionable and frivolous friends, spying the three of us walking together, would tease me about my "weird" companions, one solemn with beard and eye-glass, the other esthetic with long hair and huge spats. Mr. Balfour's knowledge of music was remarkable, considering the little time he was able to devote to it, and he was no mean performer at the piano, reading and playing classical music. We often played together Beethoven and Schumann. But it was not without difficulty that he could get away from his parliamentary duties, which increased yearly, and often I was disappointed of his company, as shown by the following letter:

1883. House of Commons. My DEAR LADY RANDOLPH,

I am groaning and swearing on this beastly bench: while you are listening to Wagnerian discords, I am listening to Irish grumblings—there is a great deal of brass in both of them; otherwise there is not much resemblance! I am sitting next—, I might be sitting next you! I am an unhappy victim. However, there is no choice. Monday night is a most unlucky one for Richter; the Irish have a talent for turning everything into an Irish debate; and when the Irish speak I must answer, as I have just been endeavouring to do!

Your miserable servant,
ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR.

M. Claude Debussy, writing from Paris, has addressed the following letter to the Directors of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, in reference to the concert at Queen's Hall on February 1, at which the composer conducted some of his own works:

It is with a feeling of sincerest pleasure that I ask you to transmit to Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra my thanks and the sincere expression of my obligation to them. I venture to think that there are few orchestras so marvellously trained. One must admire at the same time their artistic conscience, which is allied to a splendid discipline rarely obtained.

The Yorkshire Post, in a notice of a concert given by the Leeds Choral Union, speaks of Samuel Wesley's motet 'In exitu Israel' as 'one of the very few works by an English composer that will bear comparison with anything else of its kind.' Quite true!

Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Precentor of Eton College, writes: 'You may be interested to see our Musical Holiday Task paper. Sixty boys went in for it as an alternative to a literary holiday task. There were of course some queer answers, and the dictation—an entirely new thing—was the least satisfactory part of the examination; but on the whole the results are most encouraging. You are welcome to print the paper in THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

We referred to this Musical Holiday Task in our January issue (p. 50), and printed the letter of the Headmaster of Eton announcing this new departure; and we are glad to learn from Dr. Lloyd that the results of this initial test are so satisfactory. the good answers far outnumbered the bad, some of those under the 'Handel' section are rather amusing. The following are by a few different boys:

The composition of the 'Messiah' was a most tedious business, and Handel spent many months in writing this wonderful piece of music.

'Esther' was written on a new style, which was chiefly singing and not so much music.

The 'Messiah' took three years to compose, and was first produced at Leeds.

The 'Messiah' took not more than about five months, being produced at Dublin in 1842.

Handel left off the old style of Palestrina and went on to what was called water music.

The last is a gem of the first water!

Glasgow loses and Sydney gains by the removal of Mr. Joseph Bradley to the Southern hemisphere. Born at Hyde, Cheshire, February 28, 1857, he has served almost a life-long apprenticeship to music. He obtained his first organ appointment at St. Paul's Church, Stalybridge, when he was only twelve years old. Two years later he became organist of St. Thomas' Church, Heaton Chapel, Manchester; and for six years, 1881 to 1887, he held the responsible posts of organist and chorus-master of the Hallé Concerts, in addition to conducting various choral societies at Stockport, Stalybridge, and other places in the district. In 1873 he passed the examination for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists, and in 1875 he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford.

In 1887 the conductorship of the Glasgow Choral Union was vacant (it was advertised in THE MUSICAL TIMES of July, in that year) and Mr. Bradley secured this important appointment. His full-score years of work north of the Tweed have been attended with excellent results in connection with choral music in Scotland. He has rendered splendid service to the cause of art in Glasgow, and to his new duties as Conductor of the Sydney Philharmonic Society, he will bring wide experience, technical skill, boundless energy, and a genial personality—a combination of gifts upon which the City of Sydney is to be heartily congratulated. Our Glasgow correspondent (on p 185) refers to the esteem in which Mr. Bradley is held in the second city of the Empire. He and Mrs. Bradley sailed from Liverpool on February 1 for their new home, carrying with them the regard of many friends and well-wishers for their future success and happiness.

The action for slander and libel brought by Mr. Joel Horspool and the Horspool Natural Voice Academy (Limited) against Dr. William H. Cummings, President of the Incorporated Society of Musicians and Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, was tried before Mr. Justice Darling and a special jury on February 6, 7, 10, 13 and 14 at the Royal Courts of Justice. The subject-matter of the slander consisted of words admittedly uttered by Dr. Cummings at the annual conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, held at Buxton on January 2, 1907, the plaintiff alleging that these words imputed that he, the plaintiff, was an 'impudent quack,' and that he 'duped and imposed upon the public, and carried on a fraudulent and dishonest business.' There was also a further charge that Dr. Cummings had libelled the plaintiff by causing his remarks to be printed in certain newspapers and elsewhere. Dr. Cummings's remarks were based upon an advertisement of Mr. Horspool, and the defence was that they were in the nature of fair comment. The jury, after deliberating for five minutes, returned a verdict for the defendant, for whom judgment was entered, with costs. A similar action brought against The Daily Telegraph newspaper ended in judgment for the defendants, with costs. Among those who gave evidence in favour of Dr. Cummings were Sir Charles Santley and Dr. H. H. Hulbert.

The autographs of a Bach Cantata, Beethoven's Romanze in F, Mozart's Violin concerto in A, and Schubert's Pianoforte trio in E flat, which belonged to Dr. Joachim, have been acquired by a well-known collector in Vienna.

It is not always safe to put full trust and confidence in critically revised editions of great works. Two warning instances of this have recently come before us. In the German Bach Society's edition of Bach's B minor Mass, and in all other editions ancient and modern (except that of Marx, published about seventy years ago), there has hitherto been printed a wrong note in the Gloria; one that has often been sung incorrectly under various conductors! This wrong note is in the subject of the fugue, first soprano part, which should be E, not C sharp (Novello's edition, page 38, bar 2, second note of first soprano part). In every other entry of the subject the skip is of a fifth, not a third, and there can be no doubt the note C is a long-standing inaccuracy.

The other instance is in one of the oratorios of Bach's great contemporary, Handel, in the chorus 'O first created beam' ('Samson'). At bar 7 the German Handel Society's edition gives E as the soprano note: it should be C, thus agreeing with the first violin and the first oboe parts. The old Novello edition gives the note correctly, but a more recent issue of the work unfortunately repeats the error found in that of the German Handel Society. For the satisfaction of settling this point, we are indebted to the courtesy of Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Musick, for allowing us to examine Handel's autograph score of 'Samson' preserved in the King's Music Library at Buckingham Palace.

Middlesbrough is to hold its second musical festival on April 28, 29 and 30. The solo vocalists engaged are Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Olitzka, Mr. John Coates, Mr. William Green and Mr. Herbert Brown, while Miss Fanny Davies and Miss Vivien Chartres will worthily interpret instrumental solos. That the ensemble is sure to be worthy of the occasion it is only necessary to add that the Hallé Orchestra will co-operate with a choir of three hundred voices, and that Mr. Felix Corbett will preside at the organ. The programme, which is as interesting as it is comprehensive, will include the following works:

CHORAL: Jephthah (Carissimi); Scene from Phoebus and Pan (Bach); Baal scene and invocation of rain from Elijah (Mendelssohn); Blest pair of Sirens and The Lotus Eaters (Parry); The Kingdom (Elgar); Frühling's Chor (Hugo Wolf): The Raven (Shapleigh); and The Buried Song (Krug-Waldsce).

INSTRUMENTAL: Prelude, Der Himmel Lacht (Bach); Violin concerto (Beethoven): Prelude to Act 3, Lohengrin (Wagner); Sonata for pianoforte and violin in G, Op. 78 (Brahms); Symphony in G, Op. 88 (Dvordk): Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor (Tchaikovsky); Symphony, The Cambridge (Parry); Symphonic poem, Aus Böhmen's Hain und Flur (Smetana); and Musette and Elégie, from King Christian Suite (Sibelius).

Sir Hubert Parry will conduct his own works, the onerous duties of conductor-in-chief of the festival being in the experienced hands of Mr. N. Kilburn.

A Willesden girl who applied for the position of scullerymaid in a well-known county asylum received a form containing some forty questions, including the following:

Do you sing?
Of what compass is your voice?
Do you play any musical instrument?
If so, state what instrument.
Would you be willing to entertain the patients?

To these non-sculleryiac interrogations we venture to add another: 'Have you ever dishlocated your diaphragm?'

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE 'BEDFORD.'

'Bedford' is one of those fine old English psalmtunes of whose first appearance it is not possible to give the exact date. If the old psalmodists had only added to the title-pages of their collections the year of publication, what a deal of trouble they would have saved those who seek after truth! No doubt has been thrown upon the authorship of the tune. It was composed by William Weale, organist of the parish Church (St. Paul's), Bedford, about two hundred years ago. He may have been appointed when Gerard Smith built the new organ for the church in 1715; certain it is that he graduated Bachelor of Music at Cambridge in 1719, and that he died in the autumn of 1727, the registers of St. Paul's church, under date September 4, 1727, thus recording his interment:

Bury'd-Mr. William Weale, Organist.

With regard to the earliest appearance of the tune in a dated book, the late Canon W. H. Havergal stated that he found 'Bedford' in the 'Psalm Singer's Magazine' of 1729; but this has not been verified. It is almost certain, however, that even an earlier date can be assumed without running any serious risk of inaccuracy. The tune is found in a collection entitled:

THE DIVINE MUSICK SCHOLARS GUIDE with the Famous Mr. Tho: REVENSCROFIS Psalm tunes in four parts, Corrected & newly Reviv'd. To which is added a choice Collection of new Psalm tunes, Hymns, & Anthems. ye Psalm tunes are compos'd in two, three, four, five, & Six parts, ye Hymns & Anthems in two, three, & four parts, by the best Masters, And intended for the use & benefit of all true Lovers of Divine Musick.

Mr. Francis Timbrell's Preface to his 'Divine Musick Scholars Guide' is too quaint not to be quoted literatim et verbatim:

THE PREFACE.

Harmonical Brethren, I Need not aquaint you with ye Original & progress of Musick, & of its Divine use in all ages, since we have ye Testimony of it in holy Scripture, both for Antiquity & Administration in ye Church: Ye cannot doubt of ye Inventor thereof, Since Holy Writ has Directed us to jubal, Gen. 4. v. 21 nor can we be better informed of its use in all ages, then by those songs of praise with moses & the Children of Israel Sung At the Overthroof of the Egyptian Army, besids, the psalms of David are mark'd with Musical Notes above & below, with is a clear Demonstration of psalm Singing amongst ye jews of Old.

Likewise it gives a new force & edge to Devotion, it carries our thoughts up to heaven, makes us tast ye loys of it here upon earth, & raises us to ye felicity of angels. besides, observe, yt nothing is so great an Ornament To a Young Gentlemen, or a Gentlewoman, as it is, to Sing well, it gives a happy Vent & elevation to there Thoughts it refines & polishes their Manners, & is so far from hindring them in their application to bussness, yt it Secures them from those temptations, to weh plenty & idleness expose those persons, who don't know how To employ their vacant hours otherwise then in unlawful pleasures, So this kind of Devotion ye common People are most intent upon; to Instruct whom, was ye main design of this Booke.

Those who make use of these books, may Sing without ye Scots way of reading ye words, & do it in a Standing posture, Letting their hearts be ravished wth ye harmony of Gods Love & goodness, whilst Their voices are joyned in his praises; yt having perfectly Learned their parts here, they may at last come to joyn wth ye Chorus, and Sing Hallelujahs wth ye Quire of Angels in ye Heavens, to all Eternity, which is the hearty wish & prayer of your friend, FRANCIS TIMBRELL.

This curious collection of psalm-tunes is unpaged and undated. A copy in the library of the late Sir John Stainer contains the inscription 'Thomas Bradford ejus liber, 1723, while two copies unfortunately not quite perfect—in the library of the present writer bear, on various pages, the dates 1725, 1733, 1734, 1735, written by a former owner or owners. The British Museum catalogue gives 1715 as an approximate date for the publication of the book, which is perhaps a little too early.

At all events, the tune is nearly two hundred years old, Weale is without doubt its composer, and it bore the name 'Bedford' from the first. We give, in facsimile, the tune exactly as it appears in Mr. Timbrell's collection (see opposite). The obvious Timbrell's collection (see opposite). misprints will not escape notice, nor will the syncopations at the end of each line, which invest the strain with an old-world charm. 'Bedford' was originally associated with Psalm 84, but in this book it is also assigned to Psalm 27, with a curious variant of the melody in the third line:

Who was Francis Timbrell? This question was asked in letters written to musical journals by the late Rev. Henry Parr in 1868, and by the present writer in 1890, but without eliciting any response. Cannot some of our readers unearth something about this old psalmodist?

'Bedford' also appears in another early 18th century collection entitled:

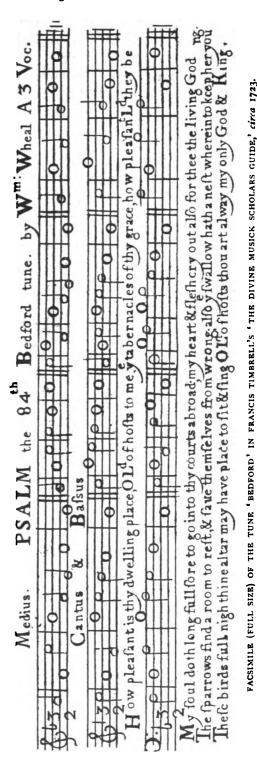

A Book of Psalmody, Containing some easy instructions for young beginners; to wch is added a select number of Psalm-tunes, Hymns &

Anthems, in 2, 3, & 4 parts.

Collected, printed, taught & sold by MATTHEW WILKINS, of great Milton, near Thame in engraved by Tho. Cross. [Oblong quarto. No date.]

Mr. Matthew Wilkins (1704-1772) was by trade a butcher. He was also a 'respectable musician' who taught many choirs in the neighbourhood of Great Milton, in the churchyard of which his bones rest in He printed his own tune-books at his village home; his daughter married a John Havergal, uncle by Michael Broom, a singing-master of Isleworth and great uncle of Frances Ridley Havergal. Visitors to Great Milton churchyard will there find tombstones of the Havergal and Wilkins families.

'Bedford' is also found in two collections compiled of the late Canon W. H. Havergal, and therefore afterwards of Birmingham. In this psalmodist's 'Choice Collection of Psalm Tunes' (circa 1731) it is assigned to W. Wale (sic), organist of Bedford, B. of M., and in Michael Broome's Collection of Church Musick for the use of his Scholars' the composer's name is differently spelt. Here is the heading, including its various abbreviations!

Therein it is found in a pleasing four-part arrangement (notice the points of imitation) as hereunder given:

The tune soon obtained popularity, as we find it (melody only), called 'Bedford,' but without composer's name, in John Wesley's 'A collection of tunes, set to music, as they are commonly sung at the Foundery.' This quaint-titled little book contained forty-one tunes; it was sold at sixpence, and published in 1742, the year Handel's 'Messiah' was produced. Owing to the wrong barring of the second part, this portion of the tune there appears in this club-footed form:

In this 'Foundery' book the syncopations are absent. For nearly a hundred years 'Bedford' retained its original triple-rhythm form. It was 'tinkered' by William Gardiner (1770-1853), the Leicester stockingmaker, in his 'Sacred Melodies,' published in 1812, where the tune stands thus:

Gardiner gives the following lame excuse for his unwarrantable alteration: 'I have changed the key to D, and written it in common time, a measure that is more stately, and better accords with the solemn grandeur in which it is disposed to move.'

Unfortunately hymnal editors of the last century too readily followed Gardiner's bad example, both in regard to change of rhythm and melody; in so doing they introduced a weak and commonplace six-four chord which spoils the graceful cadence of the original. Editors of recent collections have happily restored the tune nearer to its pristine rhythmic beauty.

Mr. William Cowan, in his invaluable 'The Music of the Church Hymnary, calls attention to an old tune which bears some resemblance to 'Bedford.' It appeared in the 'Duderstädter Gesangbuch,' a Roman Catholic collection, dated 1724, in this form:

There is nothing to show that William Weale had any knowledge of this book. His tune 'Bedford' is an original composition, the only known product of his pen, which has rightly found a place among those grand old psalm-tunes which form an interesting feature of our glorious heritage of English Church Music.

WINDSOR MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

The Rev. B. C. Everett, minor canon of St. George's Chapel, delivered an interesting lecture on 'Windsor Music and Musicians' at the Royal Albert Institute, Windsor, on February 11. The lecturer's remarks were mostly confined to the distinguished church musicians who have been officially connected with St. George's Chapel, including Merbecke, Farrant, and others. Of Dr. Child, who held the organistship for the long period of sixty-five years, in the 17th century, Mr. Everett stated that he subscribed £20 to the erection of the present Guildhall in the royal borough, also that he bequeathed to the Corporation 150 'for such charitable uses as the Mayor shall think fit,' with which they settled an annual charge of 'five pounds towards binding one poor boy apprentice yearly.'

With regard to the town of Windsor itself, it appears that in 1632 Dr. Godfrey Goodman, Bishop of Gloucester and Canon of St. George's, presented an organ to the parish church. There are interesting entries concerning this organ in the Churchwardens' accounts in connection with the periodical visits of a Dr. Tooker, Rural Dean of Maidenhead, during the erection of the instrument:

Paid for wyne and beere with Dr. Tooker at the Garter, twice, 5s.

Paid for our breakfast, for beere for ourselves and wyne to make Dr. Tooker drinck, 3s. 6d.

Paid Thomas Carter for mending something spoyled in Mr. Eyres his seat in setting up the organ lofte, 1s. 6d.

Entry, 1635-7. £2 10s. given to Mr. Bull, the Bishop of Gloucester's man, for his paines in setting up the organ in the Parish Church.

Later, during the Commonwealth régime, 1650-51, is an item strikingly characteristic of the period. It denotes the destruction of the organ presented some fifteen years previously to the Windsor parish church:

Received of William Coles for four organ pipes that were left of the organ taken down in the Church, which organ pipes wayed 44lbs., sold at 7d. a pound,

£1 5s. 10d.

Received of John Coves for his woodden pipes, 00--05--00.

The lecture, excellently illustrated by musical selections, was keenly enjoyed by an interested audience. In the unavoidable absence of Sir Walter Parratt, the Dean of Windsor occupied the chair.

Sterndale Bennett's sacred cantata 'The woman of Samaria' was sung at All Souls' Church, South Ascot, on Sunday afternoon, February 9, conducted by Mr. C. Deavin. Mr. Harry E. Carver was at the organ, and the soloists were Miss Dorothy Congreve Webb, Miss Christian Keay, Mr. Claude Goodchild and Mr. J. Tipper.

EMMANUEL COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

The opening of the new organ took place at a special evening service on January 22, the choral music including a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in G and a Te Deum in A flat (each composed by Dr. E. W. Naylor), and an anthem, Domine Deus, by Mr. Ernest Ford. The choir, which consisted of fifty men's voices (no boys), included all sorts and conditions of men. Dr. Naylor, organist of the College, conducted, and his brother, Mr. C. L. Naylor, presided at the organ. The following interesting notes, from the pen of Dr. Naylor, referring to the history of the organ, formed part of the service-paper:

'The original organ was built by Bernard Schmidt, probably in 1686, and was a gift from Mr. Burch Hothersall, a Fellow Commoner of Emmanuel College. The cases containing "show" pipes are left as Schmidt built them. The organ was used continuously from 1686 to 1812 at any rate.

'In 1733 the front pipes were gilded. They were still gilded in 1815. (See Ackermann's coloured engraving, which also shows the "lustre" or "chandelier" given by which also shows the "lustre" or "chandelier" given by Mr. Edward Hulse, hanging from the ceiling.) In 1758, Barnard Turner had £16 5s. 6d. for "thorough repair" of the organ. In 1871 the organ had been disused for many years, and was restored by Hill & Son.

'The present organ is by Norman & Beard, of Norwich.

A principal feature is the introduction of a number of soft stops, which were lacking in the old organ. An account of the instrument will appear in the College magazine.'

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Mr. G. Gordon Cleather delivered two interesting lectures on February 1 and 8, his subject being 'The art of tympani playing, especially in its relation to the organ, illustrations.

The candidates for the recent Fellowship examination numbered 99: of these the following eleven gentlemen passed:

The 'Calendar for 1907-8 and the forty-third annual Report' contains much useful information concerning the work of the College, and moreover is useful as a book of reference.

Dr. Basil Harwood, an acknowledged authority on plainsong, has edited John Merbecke's Communion Service, to which he has added an accompaniment for the organ, which village church as well as for larger instruments.' Dr. Harwood has consulted a copy of the original edition of the work belonging to the library of Christ Church, Oxford, with the result that the plain-song is presented as nearly as possible in the form in which it first appeared in 1550. Merbecke's original Kyrie has been retained, and the Agnus Dei has been provided with Interludes arranged from Kyries by Tallis, and his pupil Elway Bevin. This little book—which is published by Messrs. Novello at the price of sixpence—contains a facsimile of Merbecke's own directions, as printed in the critical block letter. in the original black letter.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare gave an organ recital at Holy Trinity Church, Ventnor, on February 8, in connection with the re-opening of the organ, which has been renovated with the re-opening of the organ, which has been renovated and enlarged through the generosity of Mr. Charles Boyd, of Winchester, the work having been successfully carried out by Mr. W. J. Burton, of Winchester. Mr. Lemare's programme included Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Wolstenholme's 'Die Antwort,' the recitalist's own Andantino in D flat, the Toccato from Widor's fifth Symphony, and Wagner's 'Parsifal' Vorspiel, the selection concluding with Lemmens's 'The Storm.' On the following day (Sunday) Mr. Lemare played the organ at both services one of his Mr. Lemare played the organ at both services, one of his voluntaries being his own 'Fantasia on the tune Hanover.' As Mr. Lemare's father was organist of Holy Trinity Church for more than forty years, the re-opening of the instrument at which he officiated so long was invested with peculiar interest.

'Memorabilia' is the title of a tastefully got-up sixteen-page booklet recording the doings of All Saints' Church Choir, Monkwearmouth, Sunderland, during the year 1907. From this we learn that of the thirteen men in the choir, eight were formerly choristers of the church. With regard to the choir library it is stated that :

*Our répertoire has favourably grown during the year, and we added eleven new anthems to our already commendable collection.

"We have no less than 120 complete sets of anthems, besides four Communion settings, morning and evening services, three sets of carols, etc., etc.

'It is with good reason that we are proud of our collection of music, for every copy has been bought by the adult members of our choir during the past ten or twelve years. Through each man willingly contributing one penny per week, the sum of about £25 has been expended in this good cause.

One more extract from this interesting little publication must be given:

'We endeavour to sing the best music and offer to God of our very best. It is this thought one feels sure that gives us zeal and energy to work hard, for nothing can be too beautiful to offer to our Master.'

The organist and choirmaster, Mr. E. W. Moore, is to be congratulated on the happy state of affairs in connection with his church. He says:

'One finds that enthusiasm and personal interest in each member, coupled with interesting work, is the best way to increase the zeal and love of members for their church and choir.'

The dedication of the new organ, built by Messra. Norman & Beard, in Hinckley parish church, Leicestershire, has prompted the issue of an interesting and illustrated booklet in connection with that auspicious event. It gives an account of the fabric and organs, a list of the vicars, order of dedication service, organ recitals, &c. With regard to the organ we learn that the first instrument erected in the church was built by George Pike England. Placed in the west gallery and opened on October 19, 1808, this organ had 21 stops and three sets of ivory keys; the one plays the full or Great organ, another the Choir or soft organ, and the third the Echo or Swell; the compass of the Great or Choir organ is GG to F in alto, and the Swell from fiddle G to F in alto.' There were no pedal keys and, indeed, it was not until 1876, upon the removal of the organ to the south side of the chancel, that any pedal pipes were added to the instru-ment! Mr. Paul Rochard is the organist and choirmaster of the church. The pamphlet is published at sixpence by Messrs. John Baxter & Sons, 24, Castle Street, Hinckley.

The fifth annual dinner of the Huddersfield and District Organists' Association (established in 1903) was held at the Queen's Hotel, Huddersfield, on January 31, with the usual saccess, the president, Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes, being no the chair. The company included no fewer than forty-three members of the Association. In responding to the toast of Miss Er the President, Mr. Sykes said, referring to the meetings of the members, that they were arranging events of an educational, social and musical character, which would take place on the last Saturday in every month. Organ recitals would be given in various churches in the district by members of the Association.

A successful performance of Dr. H. J. Edwards's sacred cantata 'The Epiphany' was given in Barnstaple Parish Church on February 12, with the composer, organist of the church, at the organ. Mr. Sydney Harper ably conducted an efficient choir of fifty-four voices-sopranos 28, altos 8, tenors 8, and basses 10. The soloists were Miss Lily Ayre (soprano), Mr. Sydney Harper (tenor) and Mr. J. M. Northcote and Mr. S. Harper, Junr. (basses), Mr. R. Lane being associated in the trio marking the appearance of the Magi. A large congregation listened to the music with evident enjoyment and appreciation.

THE RING OF THE NIBELUNG IN ENGLISH.

If, as the poet sings, any care for what is here survive in spirits rendered free, the shade of Wagner must have hovered triumphantly over Covent Garden during the recent performances of 'The Ring of the Readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES will hardly need to be reminded of the very interesting correspondence between Wagner and Mr. Emil Sander of Melbourne relative to the first performance of 'Lohengrin' in Australia, which was published in these pages last April. 'May you be enabled,' wrote Wagner, 'to have my works placed before you in English; for then only can they be thoroughly understood by an English-speaking public. We hope to achieve this in London.

The pious hope of the composer has been fulfilled at last. His greatest work has been given in English in a manner that he could not but approve, and the event has justified him to the full. 'The Ring' in English spoke with a voice very different from any yet heard in this country. It would be too much, perhaps, to claim that every word sung upon the stage was followed by the audience. Our English singers have still a good deal to learn in the matter of enunciation; but on the whole they made themselves understood, and even those who knew their 'Ring' best found themselves listening to the work with an altogether new kind of interest. It seemed to have left the region of the merely artistic, and to be a thing of human flesh and blood. Interpreted in our own tongue the wondrous Volsung story was no longer a shadowy romance of the early world. It took on a new touch of reality; it lived before our eyes. Siegmund and Sieglinde breathed vows that we could understand, Siegfried exulted in a life akin to our own, Brünnhilde was wrung by a passion that echoed in every breast. Nay, more, the sympathy established between artists and audience by a common tongue seemed to justify, as it were, the very idea and essence of opera by restoring something of that old festal character which opera inherited from its progenitor, the tragedy of the Greeks. Nothing was further from the thoughts of Æschylus and Sophocles than the presentment of a merely artistic entertainment. To them the production of a tragedy was a solemn festival in which poet and people joined to celebrate the splendour of the god Opera, founded in avowed imitation of the Greek drama, never wholly lost that festal note. Even in the lowest depths of eighteenth-century conventionality one can trace it in the inevitable 'happy endings' of Handel's operas. But it was left for Wagner to make it a living principle once more. The foundation of Bayreuth was the symbol of its resurrection. Not only in the august close of Die Meistersinger'—so curiously akin in spirit to the final scene of Æschylus's 'Eumenides'—in which the whole German people seems to be drawn into the magic circle of art, but in all Wagner's work the festal note sounds, often tuned down to the expression of merely national feeling, but still exultant and sublime. That note sounded perhaps for the first time in our musical history in the English 'Ring,' and to many it gave a new and richer meaning to the familiar strains.

What the result of the Covent Garden experiment will be it would be hasty to predict. The brilliant success of the Nibelung cycles will doubtless lead to fresh enterprise. Whatever the future may have in store, it is safe to say that English opera now stands upon a totally different footing from that of old days. to sing the treble part. The applause which greeted these remarks indicated that Dr. Smith's generous offer would be ashes; it may now take its place in the palace require accepted. Madrigal singing is a form of artistic upon what was formerly esteemed a merely provincial and suburban form of entertainment, and the presence of the King and Queen at Covent Garden reassured the doubters as to the complete correctness of patronizing anything so commonplace as their native language. Nevertheless it is well to bear in mind that though a splendid start has been made, the battle is not yet won. The 'Ring' cycles were undoubtedly a triumph for English singers, but after all a performance of a German work, conducted by a German musician, cannot be accepted as representing the apotheosis of English opera. There has been a little too much 'spread-eagleism' in the press over the whole thing, and though much has been accomplished, much more remains to be done if we are ever to have a national opera-house and a national opera of our own. Those who are old enough to remember the prophetic raptures of wellmeaning folk over the foundation of the Carl Rosa Company, and later over the opening of the Royal English Opera House, may be forgiven for a touch of hesitation in announcing the arrival of the golden age.

As to the performance itself the first honours fell by unanimous acclaim to Dr. Richter, whose incomparable genius for conducting was never more superbly displayed. The two great surprises of 'The Ring' were the Brünnhilde of Miss Perceval Allen and the Siegmund of Mr. Walter Hyde. Miss Allen's very promising career as a concert vocalist had hardly prepared us for her magnificent singing in 'The Twilight of the Gods.' She has much to learn as an actress, but her position as a Wagnerian artist is already assured. Mr. Hyde stepped with one stride from 'Miss Hook of Holland' to 'The Valkyrie,' and seemed as much at home in the one as in the other. His performance of the extremely difficult and exacting part of Siegmund showed extraordinary promise, and whatever English opera may lack in the future it will be at no loss for a tenor. Mr. Clarence Whitehill as Wotan and Mr. Hans Bechstein as Mime renewed old successes; Mr. Hedmondt gave a clever sketch of Loge, and Mr. Peter Cornelius was an almost ideal Siegfried, singing with no little charm and acting with uncommon ardour and spirit. Madame Agnes Nicholls sang Sieglinde's music with perfect art, and Miss Borghild Bryhn showed much promise as Brünnhilde in 'The Valkyrie,' while Mr. Thomas Meux as Alberich acquitted himself of a difficult task with remarkable success. The minor parts were in almost every case well performed. The singing of the Rhine maidens and of the Valkyries was for once an unmixed delight, and throughout the Cycles excellent work was done by many artists whose names we have unfortunately no space to record. The Covent Garden authorities deserve hearty congratulations upon the success of their experiment. They have made the fortnight that lies between January 27 and February 8, 1908, an important epoch in the history of English opera.

R. A. STREATFEILD.

Dr. G. H. Smith, organist of Hull Parish Church, presided at a recent fortnightly meeting of the Musical Union (Hull), a male-voice organization. In referring to the charm of English madrigals written in Elizabethan days, Dr. Smith made the following offer to the Musical Union: That if they (under their excellent conductor, Mr. Stringer) would be willing to take up the study of those fine old madrigals, he (Dr. Smith) would be only too glad to train a dozen boys to sing the treble part. The applause which greeted these unashamed. Society has set the stamp of its approval enjoyment which deserves every encouragement.

FOLK-SONG.

Folk-songs from Somerset. Gathered and edited, with pianoforte accompaniments, by Cecil J. Sharp. Fourth series. [Simpkin & Co., Ltd.]

Folk-songs from Dorset. Collected by H. E. D. Hammond, with pianoforte accompaniment by Cecil J. Sharp. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

These two collections are a welcome addition to our store of folk-songs. While Mr. Sharp has made Somerset his own, Dorset appears to have been practically untouched by the worker in traditional music. Both counties must, of necessity, be rich in folk-song. They are uninfluenced by any large manufacturing town, and experience has shown that where vast tracts of agricultural land exist, there folksong lingers in quantity even more than in the lonely dales and among the fells of the north.

Folk-song collectors, like ardent fishermen, eagerly scan the baskets of fellow anglers and mentally compare catches. We are not quite sure whether Mr. Sharp's latest creelful contains such prizes as do his former hauls. It must be remembered that this collection is his fourth series. Yet folk-songs are delightfully non-obvious, and do not reveal their hidden beauties on first acquaintance; therefore we may readily assume that many, if they do not particularly appeal to-day, may come with greater force to-morrow.

In looking over the twenty-five songs which form the contents of this volume, we come across many old favourites in different forms; all interesting enough in their variation from those previously published. It is not a far cry from the hills of Cornwall, and from the centre of Dartmoor, to Somerset; therefore we may certainly expect variants from those published by Mr. Baring Gould sixteen or seventeen years ago, and they are present in 'The Rambling Sailor, years ago, and they are present in 'The Rambling Sailor,' 'Green Broom,' and some others. A fine, sturdy sea-song, 'The Coasts of High Barbary,' calls for special notice in Mr. Sharp's collection; it is a pure forecastle ditty, with its old tune and picturesque words. 'Come all you worthy Christians' is surely more of a version of the widely spread 'Gilderoy' tune than, as Mr. Sharp states, of 'The Miller of the Dee.' The traditional version of the early ballad 'Death and the Lady' is also a notable inclusion. 'Searching for lambs,' 'Arise! arise!' 'Bridgewater Fair,' 'The bonny lighter boy,' are average folk-songs of merit. The bonny lighter boy,' are average folk-songs of merit, while 'Ruggleton's daughter,' with its explanatory note tracing its various forms of publication, and 'The cruel mother,' are of considerable interest. 'James Macdonald' is an example of the execution ballad with its quaint old 'hanging tune. Mr. Sharp has told us that he has gathered some fifteen hundred folk-tunes, and as his four series of 'Folksongs from Somerset' only bring to light something over a hundred, we trust that an appreciative public will enable him to continue the publication he commenced three years ago.

'Folk-songs from Dorset' is a collection made by Mr. H. E. D. Hammond, and is the first of a series of county folk-song albums to be issued by Messrs. Novello. The book contains sixteen numbers of much merit, regarded both from a musical and antiquarian point of view.

Such songs as 'Robin Hood and the Bishop of Hereford,' 'Fair Margaret and Sweet William,' and 'Lady Maisry,' are fragments of long narrative ballads, versions of which have been before published, except perhaps 'Lady Maisry.' We very much doubt whether the last named is a correct title, as the burning of the unfortunate lady is not even hinted at in Mr. Hammond's version.

It should be noticed that although the contents of the volume are made up from traditional songs gathered in the extreme south of England, yet there is a distinct Scottish flavour about them. One of them—'As I walked out one flavour about them. One of them—'As I walked out one May morning'—is certainly, both in tune and words, the Scottish song 'As I went out as May morning,' which appears in the fourth volume of Johnson's 'Scots Museum' (1792). The two versions have apparently existed independently of each other in traditional form. 'The Jolly Ploughboy,' 'The Rambling Comber,' and others are more frequently heard in the southern han in the northern counties. The 'Sprig of hearthyme' is however, universal. We think that the book would have gained had there been an appendix of brief explanatory notes as to the different versions, and other particulars regarding the songs.

While the editor disclaims any interference with the melodies, he confesses that some slight liberties have been taken with the words. All who have intimate knowledge of folk song will agree with him that, for most reasons, it would be impossible to issue in a popular publication the songs as literally taken down. There may be danger, as in church restoration, in these emendations, but where an editor is fully imbued with the folk-song spirit and conscious of his responsibilities, lovers of folk-song need have no fear. In this case the slight verbal alterations appear to have been most carefully and judiciously made.

The Opera. By R. A. Streatfeild. With an introduction by J. A. Fuller Maitland.

[George Routledge & Sons, Ltd.]

This is the third edition, revised and enlarged, of (to quote the sub-title) 'A sketch of the development of Opera, with full descriptions of all works in the modern repertory. At the appearance of the second edition we heartily welcomed and commended the book; in repeating these sentiments it may suffice, as showing the value of the work, to quote from Mr. Fuller Maitland's Introduction. He says: Mr. Streatfeild has hit upon the happy idea of combining the mere story-telling part of his task with a survey of the history of opera from its beginning early in the 17th century to the present day. In the course of this historical narrative, the plots of all operas that made a great mark in the past, or that have any chance of being revived in the present, are related clearly and succinctly, and with a rare and delightful absence of prejudice.' This we can fully endorse, at the same time adding that Mr. Streatfeild's 'The Opera' is a useful book of reference.

Old English Organ Music. Nos. 27-30. By various composers. Edited by John E. West.

[Novello & Company, Ltd.]

Dr. Benjamin Rogers leads the way in a group of five pieces forming No. 27 of this interesting series of music for the king of instruments. It is a placid little prelude of twelve bars in the key of D minor. To this succeeds a fugal Allegro moderato by Thomas Roseingrave, containing some fine scale-passages for the pedals. A Largo in E flat, by Samuel Wesley, speaks for itself in its dignified ecclesiasticism. A charming Andante pastorale by Thomas Adams is sure to find acceptance, while a sprightly Finale in F, by William Hine, the chant composer, concludes a capital quintet of old English organ music.

A 'Verse for a double organ,' by Dr. Christopher Gibbons, as arranged from a manuscript in the British Museum, forms another number. Dr. Dupuis is represented by a group of three pieces—Larghetto, Allegretto and Fugue, a most interesting trio of pieces, of which the pleasing Allegretto or the Fugue could be played separately. The last of this quartet-instalment is a Voluntary in D minor by William Russell, a composer who has rightly met with the favour of Sir Walter Parratt. It consists of a Larghetto (in D minor) which leads into a Fugue (Allegro) in the tonic major key. The whole forms an interesting piece, the Coda being particularly impressive. In the discharge of his editorial duties Mr. John E. West has combined artistic restraint with practical utility.

What does Richard Wagner relate concerning the origin of his musical composition of 'The Ring of the Nibelungs'? By S. Röckl. Translated by C. de C. Parrish.

[Breitkopf & Haertel.]

This brochure of twenty-seven pages is 'compiled from epistolary utterances of the master' concerning his famous cycle of operas. The extracts cover a period of seventeen years—1853 to 1870—and the letters from which they are years—1853 to 1870—and the letters from which they are taken were written to various friends of the composer's, chiefly to Liszt. In one letter, dated 'London, April 5, 1855,' Wagner says: 'The day before yesterday I got the first act ['Die Walkure'] finished with great difficulty, and already I am contenting myself with the bope of completing at least the second act here as well. . Believe me, I he have been in the northern counties. The Sprig of at least the second act here as well. . . Believe me, I he have 'is, however, universal. We think that the book ought not to have gone [come] to London!' Poor Wagner!

Ignaz Jan Paderewski. By Edward Algernon Baughan.
[John Lane.]

This well-written monograph on the distinguished pianist is stronger on its critical than on its biographical side. From internal evidence it may be assumed that the materials of the life-story herein told have been obtained from sources other than personal contact with the subject thereof. No letters are given, and, as every biographer knows, how valuable they are in helping to fill in the picture. Still, for all that, Mr. Baughan has produced a readable book, the illustrations adding to its value. Not the least interesting feature of these pages is the account given of M. Paderewski's first visit to London, in May, 1890, with the various newspaper criticisms then passed upon his performances. One of these criticisms is from the pen of Mr. George Bernard Shaw, who said: 'There is Paderewski, a man of various moods, who was alert, humorous, delightful at his first recital; sensational, empty, vulgar and violent at his second; and dignified, intelligent, almost sympathetic at his third.' As Mr. Baughan says, the 'almost sympathetic' is distinctly good. A slight misprint on p. 81, 'sonata' instead of 'concerto' (the pianist's Op. 17), should be corrected in the next edition of this recent and welcome addition to Mr. John Lane's series of 'Living masters of music.'

Elleen. Words by Charles F. Grindrod.

My true love hath my heart. Words by Sir Philip Sidney.

Music by Ivor Atkins.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The talented organist of Worcester Cathedral shows in these songs that secular music is as well within his grasp as that of the Church. The gallantry of Mr. Grindrod's lines may be doubted, but although the particularly fascinating lady to whom they are addressed seems to be an arrant coquette, the home truths are so gilded with graceful compliments that forgiveness may confidently be expected. The light and bantering spirit has been admirably caught by the composer, and the music trips gaily and lingers warningly in faithful attendance on the text.

Sir Philip Sidney's lines have had many settings, but methods change and even love has its fashions, so there is justification for our young composers taking up familiar poems, and if Mr. Atkins's music does not throw any new light on the inner meaning of the lines, it happily echoes the courteous sentiment so quaintly and frankly expressed.

Mr. Francis Hill Harper died, we regret to record, on February 22, aged fifty-three. The son of Mr. Edmund B. Harper, a member of the well-known musical family, Mr. F. H. Harper served his apprenticeship with Messrs. Novello & Co., and for the past twenty years held the responsible post of head of their bookbinding department.

M. CLAUDE DEBUSSY.

HIS FIRST APPEARANCE IN ENGLAND.

Nothing could have been heartier than the applause which greeted M. Claude Debussy as he stepped on to the platform at Queen's Hall on February 1. The warmth of the welcome which he received testified to the esteem in which he is held in this country. The occasion was a concert of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, which thereby became invested with unusual interest. That exquisite little tone-poem 'L'après-midi d'un faune' was the first piece which M. Debussy conducted. This characteristic work, which has become familiar to London and provincial concert-goers, received a delicate and impressive rendering under the baton of its composer. As a conductor M. Debussy is undemonstrative; he has nothing to do with those gesture demonstrations adopted by some wielders of the baton, yet he gets what he wants from the players who interpret his music.

The novelty of the afternoon's music was 'La mer,' three symphonic sketches for orchestra. As they were composed by M. Debussy between 1903 and 1905, they may be regarded as among his ripest productions. This trio of pieces are severally entitled:

 De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From dawn to noon at sea).

2. Jeux de vagues (Gambols of the waves).

3. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue between the wind and the sea).

So novel are the effects which M. Debussy obtains from his wonderful scheme of orchestral colour, so elusive is the music, so formless, and yet in a way so graphic, that it is difficult to express an opinion upon a work of this kind after a first hearing. Such atmospheric strains, so unlike what one is accustomed to, must be listened to in a passive frame of mind, perchance in a darkened room. There can be no question as to the cleverness of the music or its poetic import; the only thing is to get one's ears educated, so to speak, in order to appreciate its strange idiom. At the close of the performance the composer-conductor—who appeared in the unconventional garb of a lounge jacket, Why not?—was most enthusiastically recalled.

Herr Hugo Becker played with remarkable technical skill Volkmann's Violoncello concerto in A minor (Op. 33), a work which is of little value as music; and the concert opened with Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture and closed with Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony in B minor—a good beginning and a pleasant ending to this eventful music-

The concert on February 15 was played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra entirely off their own bat, and in so doing they scored a success. Mr. Maurice Sons, the able leader of the band, interpreted with artistic insight, good tone and phrasing Bach's Introduction and Fugue from the Sonata No. 2, in A minor, for violin alone, his performance of the work being, from all points of view, commendable in a very high degree. The remainder of the more or less familiar programme does not call for detailed comment; it consisted of Weber's 'Der Freischütz,' and Smetana's 'The bartered bride' overtures, Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, and L'apprenti sorcier (Scherzo for orchestra) by Paul Dukas. Except the Debussy pieces, Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted both concerts with his customary thoroughness.

The Aberdeen Choral Union, in conjunction with the Scottish Orchestra, produced David Stephen's new setting of Lady Nairne's ballad 'The Laird o' Cockpen' at their fourth Subscription concert, in the Music Hall, on January 30. The composer, himself a Scotsman, has caught the spirit of the old song, with the result that its subtle humour is admirably reflected in this modern setting. The orchestration, a special feature of the work, was brought out to full advantage by Dr. Cowen's able body of players, while the choir, in entering into the spirit of the ballad, gave a good rendering of the vocal parts. The performance was conducted by the composer. The remainder of the programme, which included Dvorák's 'In der Natur' overture, Strauss's 'Toq' und Verklärung,' and Liszt's Pianoforte concerto in E flag (the solo part played by Mr. Frederic Lamond), we conducted by Dr. F. H. Cowen.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The concert given by the Royal Choral Society on January 30, at the Albert Hall, was of special interest, as it included the first performance in London of Sir Charles Stanford's 'Stabat Mater,' produced at the Leeds festival last year. It will be remembered that the composer styles his work a symphonic cantata, and that it differs from previous settings of the poem to the Virgin Mary in the great prominence given to the orchestra, two out of the five movements being purely instrumental. Also, that while use is made of plain-song inflections, they are approached from a modern standpoint, and the music is emotional and dramatic in its essence. Under Sir Charles's direction the lastnamed attributes were made prominent, the choristers singing with an intensity of feeling that showed comprehension of, and sympathy with, the composer's intentions. These qualities were specially noticeable in the delivery of the sections 'O quam tristis et afflicta,' and 'Morientem desolatum.' The portion beginning 'Fac ut portem' was also magnificently delivered, and the splendid pedal passage commencing the finale, and the conclusion, were superbly sung. The soloists were Madame Mary Conly, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Harry Dearth, of whom the first-named sang with the greatest purity of style and intensity of devotional feeling. The second part of the programme consisted of selections from Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' which were imposingly rendered under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, the choir simply revelling in the noble choruses.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

For this season the directors of this celebrated Society have adopted the policy of engaging four conductors for the seven concerts. The first two concerts were conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, two are to be conducted by Dr. Richter, two by Dr. Cowen, and one by Mr. Arthur Nikisch, and some of the composers to be introduced will conduct their own works.

At the first concert of the season, which was given on January 29, Mr. Wood made his first appearance as a conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and met with a flattering reception. The programme was as follows:

Funeral March					Grieg.
(In memory of Dr. Gri	eg an	d Dr.	loach	im.)	_
Concerto, two violins and stringed	orche	stra, ii	Dn	ninor	Bach.
Symphony No. 5, in E minor				Tch	aikovsky.
					Hubay.
Symphonic noem 'Finlandia'					Sibelius

It was soon apparent that Mr. Wood had determined to live up to his reputation. The march was most impressively performed, and the symphony had a masterly interpretation. The symphonic poem did not make a great effect, although it was played with ample colour. The double concerto was played by Franz von Vecsey and his former teacher, Jenö Hubay, the first appearance of the latter musician in Eugland. The performance was not a specially distinguished one; the Largo movement, however, was played with much charm.

The new Violin concerto turned out to be a fully developed work. It was admirably played by von Vecsey, and conducted by the composer. The opening movement was not striking except as an exemplification of well-written violin passages, the Adagio was far more interesting, and the Finale (Allegro con fuoco) displayed melodious and piquant themes. If impressions of a first hearing can be trusted, this movement should be the popular feature of the work. Mr. Hubay was cordially received; the audience was large, and obviously well pleased with the whole concert.

At the second concert, given on February 13, Mr. Wood again conducted. The programme, an over-lengthy one, was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G				Bach.
Concerto (pianoforte), in A				Schumann.
Soloist, Mr. En	(IL	SAUER.
Vocal scena-'The Bells,' for parit	one	or cont	ralte	o solo
				Franco Leoni.
				Beethoven.
Enigma variations	• •	• •
Symphonic poem, 'Till Eulenspiege	1.			R. Strauss.

Again Mr. Wood secured splendid interpretations of the orchestral numbers. His reading of the C minor Symphony provoked some criticism, but it cannot be denied that it Parryesque by reason of its breezy charm.

exhibited independence and individuality. Mr. Sauer is always a welcome pianist, and on this occasion he was as successful as ever. Mr. Leoni's new work was scarcely of the type suitable for these concerts. It contains some fanciful, if rather obvious, orchestral effects. The vocal part, although sung with considerable skill by Mr. Charles Tree, failed to make much impression. Again the audience was large, we are glad to record.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The second concert of the season was given in the Queen's Hall on February 12. The first part of the programme consisted of the first two sections of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (the 'Wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha'). On the whole a very good performance was given. The choir was occasionally ragged in attack and release, but the tone and expression were decidedly good. Madame Conly, Mr. Noël Fleming (tenor) and Mr. Thorpe Bates (bass) were all efficient soloists.

Two novelties were introduced. The first was a selection from a one-act opera, 'Fra Francesco,' by Henry Waller. It is stated that the opera was produced under Dr. Muck's direction at Berlin. The selection consisted of a prelude for orchestra and organ and a soprano solo and chorus, 'Ave Maria.' We regret we cannot profess to feel any enthusiasm for the music. It displays some feeling and warmth of colour, but for the most part the ideas lack originality and distinction. Madame Conly deserves high praise for her broad and beautiful performance of the solo.

The other novelty was a setting of the Latin version of the Beatitudes for baritone solo, double chorus, orchestra and organ by 'Mr. Edward Maryon'—a nom de plume. The music is written in a serious devotional spirit. But the tints are too low and the continued recurrence of themes too monotonous. The orchestral writing is thick and often vague. There were occasional glimpses of melodic beauty and the climax was fairly effective. Mr. Thorpe Bates sang the trying solo part with intense expression. He is a conscientious artist, at present a little in need of the virtue of restraint. Whether either of the works newly presented will have a future in the répertoire of choral societies is, we are afraid, very doubtful. The young English school can do better work than this. The final item of the concert, Mr. Holbrooke's remarkable work 'The Bells,' proved this to be true. With all its difficulties and dubiosities there is surely a wealth of originality in this characteristic conception.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Compositions by two students were included in the programme of the Students' concert at Queen's Hall on February 19. The first two movements from a Sonata in D for pianoforte and violin by Mr. Morton F. G. Stephenson proved bright and pleasing nusic, and were admirably rendered by Miss Mary Burgess and Mr. Urik Tschaïkowsky. Miss Katharine Eggar was represented by an Introduction and Ballade from a Suite for violoncello and pianoforte, indicative of earnest thought and much feeling. The executants were Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell and the composer. The most finished of the singers was Mr. Thomas Gibbs, who sang with dramatic emphasis an excerpt from Verdi's opera 'La Forza del Destino.' Another vocalist who showed great promise was Miss Mary Fielding. Mr. Reginald Biggers attacked with great assurance Bach's Organ Toccata and Fugue in D, in Mr. D'Albert's arrangement, and Miss Helen M. Dodd showed much technical facility in Chopin's Ballade in A flat. A Serenade for wind, harp and strings by Bernhard Sekles was admirably rendered under the conductorship of Mr. Hans Wessely.

Sir Hubert Parry's 'Suite in D major,' for violin and pianoforte, was produced at the Brinsmead Chamber Concerts at the Cavendish Rooms, on February 22, the players being Mr. Elderhorst and Signor Budinani. Of the five movements constituting this fine work, the Capriccioso is typically Parryesoue by reason of its breezy charm.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The fifth concert of the fourth series given by this organization was held at the Queen's Hall on February 17, Dr. Richter conducting. An immense audience was attracted, all tickets having been disposed of some days before the concert took place. The first item in the programme was the 'Meistersinger' overture, which was of course superbly rendered. Much of the interest of the concert was centred in Mischa Elman, who played the Brahms Concerto. Numerous and great as this phenomenal player's triumphs have been, it may be doubted whether ever before hehas shown deeper interpretative insight than on this occasion he displayed in the first movement at least of this now classic Concerto. The second movement was also beautifully played, but the third movement was scarcely so successful.

played, but the third movement was scarcely so successful. The finest performance of Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung' that it has been our good fortune to hear was another memorable feature of the concert. Mischa Elman also played Beethoven's Romance in F in fine style, and a glorious performance of the same composer's Symphony in A brought to a noble conclusion one of the most successful concerts given by the London Symphony Orchestra.

HANDEL SOCIETY.

Those dwellers at the East-end of London who attended the performance of Handel's 'Hercules' by this Society at the People's Palace on February 15 had an enjoyable evening's music. If 'Hercules' is stronger in its solos than in its choruses, there can be placed to its credit such choral movements as 'Crown with festal pomp the day,' 'Let none despair,' and 'Jealousy.' In these the choir and orchestra gave a good account of themselves; indeed, the whole performance was one of commendable excellence. The soloists were Mrs. A. H. Bright, Miss Maria Yelland, Miss Mary Peddle, and Messrs. Basil Mayhew, Arthur D'Oyly and Francis Harford. Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor ably conducted, and Mr. E. G. Croager rendered good service at the organ.

REAPPEARANCE OF MR. MORITZ MOSZKOWSKI.

Mr. Moszkowski, who first appeared in England at the Philharmonic Concert of May 20, 1885, gave an orchestral concert of his own compositions at Queen's Hall on February 19. The programme included his Pianoforte concerto, his Violin concerto in C (Op. 30), Zoraja's aria from his opera 'Boabdil,' some short orchestral pieces, and the first performance of a new orchestral Suite, No. 3, in A flat (Op. 79). The last-named work consists of four movements: a vivacious, melodious and well-constructed Allegro molto; a kind of Scherzo in F, a distinctive feature of which is the persistent repetition almost throughout the entire movement of the note C in the middle of the part-writing; a tuneful and lively waltz in D flat; and a vigorous Finale suitably headed Allegro decise. In all these movements the music flows on with a continuity and grace distinctive of this composer's style. The soloists in the Pianoforte and Violin concertos were respectively Miss Dora Bright and Mr. Georges Enesco, both of whom rendered full justice to their parts. The vocalist was Madame Menzies. Mr. Moszkowski conducted in a quiet and unobtrusive manner, and secured from the Queen's Hall Orchestra admirable interpretations of his compositions.

KRUSE QUARTET.

The fifth of the subscription concerts given by the Kruse Quartet at Bechstein Hall, took place on February 8, when the programme opened with Dr. Ernest Walker's Quintet in B flat minor for horn, two violins, viola and violoncello. This consists of three movements, in each of which the horn is written for most sympathetically and with romantic effects. The horn part was played by Mr. A. Borsdorf with a refinement and finish that contributed in great measure to the pleasure given by the musicianly work. The remainder of the programme consisted of Beethoven's Quartet in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2) and Sinding's Pianoforte quintet in the same key (Op. 5), Madame Fischer Sobell rendering valuable help at the keyboard.

MR. DUNHILL'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

It is eminently satisfactory that Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill received sufficient support at his first series of Chamber concerts to justify his commencement of a second on Frebruary 7, at Steinway Hall. The present scheme is to give second or third performances of new works too often laid aside after a single hearing. The first concert of the new series began with the 'Quartet fantasie' for pianoforte and strings composed by Madame Alice Bredt-Verne, and concluded with a Pianoforte quintet by Mr. James Friskin. Both works are such as improve on further acquaintance and, it may be added, are worthy of the continued attention of lovers of chamber music. The pianoforte part of the first named was admirably played by Miss Mathilde Verne, and of the latter by Mr. Friskin, an excellent account of the string parts being given by Messrs. T. F. Morris, K. Kinze, F. Bridge and Ivor James. The vocalist was Miss Gladys Honey, whose expressive singing gave great pleasure.

Honey, whose expressive singing gave great pleasure.

At the second concert, on February 14, there was played Dr. Vaughan Williams's Pianoforte quintet in C minor, a tersely written and refined work of considerable musical interest, which was sympathetically rendered by Messrs. Donald F. Tovey, L. Zimmermann, F. Bridge, G. Yates and Paul Ludwig. A pleasing feature of this concert was the singing by Mr. Greeves Johnson of 'Four songs from Vagabondia,' by Mr. Thomas Dunhill, fresh and spontaneous compositions that merit popularity.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Elgar's 'Caractacus' received a fine interpretation by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society on February 1, under the inspiring direction of Mr. Allen Gill. The full-voiced choir sang with dramatic fervour and poetic insight, and the soloists—Miss Esta d'Argo and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, Albert Garcia and Percival Driver —were hardly less successful in their respective parts.

The London Sunday School Choir gave their annual spring festival at the Royal Albert Hall on February 22. The choir, conducted by Mr. William Whiteman, and the Orchestra of the Union, under Mr. Wesley Hammett, numbered 1,200 performers. The choral pieces included Wesley's 'Blessed be the God and Father,' Pughe Evans's 'Lead, kindly Light,' Gounod's 'Sing to God' (encored), Handel's 'Then round about the starry throne,' 'Haste thee, nymphs,' 'Wretched lovers,' and Crotch's 'Methinks I hear.' The Willesden competition choir also sang Peter Cornelius's part-song 'I can but love thee.' The solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Wilfrid Platt.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a concert on February I in the Crystal Palace Concert room, when Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' occupied the first part of the programme. The solo parts were interpreted by Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Norah Newport and Miss Edith Miller. Mr. Charles Fry was once more heard in the recitation part, and both choir and orchestra rendered efficient service. The feature of the second part was the performance of Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's symphonic setting for orchestra and chorus of Keats's 'Byron.' Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted.

The first public concert of the Southwark Choral Society took place at the Town Hall, Lavender Hill, on February 10, when the greater part of the programme was devoted to 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha.' The choral portions were sympathetically rendered by the members of the Society, indicating the results of careful training by the conductor, Dr. Madeley Richardson. The solo vocalists were Miss Beatrice Spencer, Mr. G. Schmedes and Mr. Foxton Ferguson.

The members of the Philomel Choral Society gave their first concert on February 10 in the Hall of the Blind School, Avenue Road. Goring Thomas's cantata 'The Sunworshippers,' and Gade's 'Spring's Message,' as well as Faning's 'The Vikings' and Elgar's 'Spanish Serenade' were given with much expression by the choir under the spirited conductorship of Mr. Edward G. Croager.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

Vienna, February 15.

Two recent and prominent features here have been new operas by Goldmark and Smareglia. The first was 'Das Wintermärchen,' produced at the Hofoper, of which the libretto by Willner is based on Shakespeare's 'The winter's tale.' The performance with the best artists of the company was most brilliant: the principal rôles were entrusted to Mesdames Kurz and Mildenburg, and MM. Schrödter, Slezah, Demuth and Mayer. The freshness and inexhaustibility of invention of the composer, now advanced in years, caused general astonishment, as did also his wealth of beautiful melody, animated rhythms, and the important part played by the chorus throughout the work, in addition to the magnificent orchestral colouring and the impressiveness of the stage action. Less striking was Smareglia's opera (libretto by Ulica), in which Mesdames Oberländer and Drill-Oridge and MM. Hofbauer and Spiwak sustained the principal parts. This work, by a native composer, was well rendered under the direction of Capellmeister Baldreich, and met with a friendly reception.

At the Opera House ballets of late have been rare; but a new one by Hassreiter, entitled 'Das Urtheil des Paris,' the music by Stoktz, caused, however, little excitement. More successful was the performance at the 'Jubilee Theatre of Paccini's 'Manon Lescaut,' in which Fraulein Oberländer was admirable as the principal character. All who were acquainted with Massenet's celebrated opera of the same name were busy mentally comparing the two

Music by Claude Debussy has been much in evidence here. The Concert Society gave the symphonic poem 'La Mer,' but it was not at all to the taste of the audience, while the Conservatoire, by its performance of the cantata 'La Demoiselle élue,' did not earn much thanks: the work was found poetic but tedious. César Franck's 'Chasseur maudit' and the highly interesting Variations on a merry theme of J. Adam Hiller for orchestra, by Max Reger, performed at the Philharmonic concerts, gave greater pleasure. The latter composer has begun to write in a clearer, purer, and therefore more effective style.

New chamber works have been given by the Rosé Quartet: a Quartet for strings by Ernst Toch and a Sonata for violin and pianoforte by Gustav Hawranek, both of which met with approval. The composers are young and talented, so that with time and experience they will probably produce music of riper, deeper import.

An interesting concert was given on February 10 by the New Ladies' Club. The programme, consisting entirely of works composed by ladies during the past one hundred years, included no fewer than twenty-one numbers, pianoforte pieces, songs, chamber music and choruses. The composers were German, French, English, and Scandinavian. The best numbers were a 'Psalm' by Kitty von Escherich, Variations by Emma von Fischer, choruses by Else Wellner, and songs by M. L. von Aust. These works showed that ladies of the present day are more skilful in the art of composition than were their predecessors.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The fourth Chamber concert of the season took place in the Queen's College Hall on January 23, when, in addition to quartets sung by local ladies, the programme included a Trio for organ, violin and violoncello by Rheinberger—played by Messrs. Montagu Nathan, Arthur Bolton and F. H. Sawyer (organist)—a Trio of Beethoven's, and solos for violin and violoncello.

M. Eugene Ysaye, with Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Charlton Keith, gave, on February 4, a concert which formed one of the series of Phillips' Subscription Concerts. The playing of the great violinist almost reached perfection, while Miss Lett's selection of songs was admirable and worthily sunc.

The Philharmonic Society's concert on February 7 comprised a very varied miscellaneous selection of music, including, for the orchestra alone, Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, the prelude to Wagner's 'Tristan and Isolde,' Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un faune' and Sullivan's overture 'Di Ballo.' The choir distinguished itself very favourably in Mozart's 'Splendente te, Deus' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer.' The very admirable soloists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Dr. Lierhammer and Mr. Boris Hambourg. The two last named appeared for the first time in Belfast, and their performances were greatly admired.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Messrs. Harrison's third Popular Concert attracted a crowded audience to the Town Hall on January 20. As Mr. McCormack, the new Irish tenor, was unable to be present owing to indisposition, his place was taken at a moment's notice by Mr. Walter Hyde, an excellent substitute, who has since made his mark at the English performances of the 'Ring' at Covent Garden. The other vocalists were Madame Albani, Miss Marie Stuart, the new contralto, Mr. Dalton Baker and The Alexandra Ladies' Quartet. Miss Vera Margolies was the solo pianist and Mr. Victor Marmont accompanied. The death of Mr. Thomas Harrison on the previous day prevented Mr. Percy Harrison, hisnephew, and director of the Harrison Concerts, from being present at the concert. Mr. Thomas Harrison, who was inhis ninetieth year, was closely connected with the musical doings of Birmingham since he first became a local citizen in the year 1844.

The Birmingham Temperance Philharmonic Choral Society gave a popular concert in the Town Hall on January 27, under Mr. W. G. Proverbs' able conductorship. The choir only needs strengthening in the male-voice department to make it an evenly-balanced body of voices. Great advance was shown in the important matters of phrasing and light and shade, and a fine quality of tone especially marked the rendering of Cooke's 'Strike the lyre,' Pinsuti's 'Good-night, beloved' and the choral fantasia on Wallace's 'Maritana.' Miss Nellie Finch, Miss Grace Ivell and Mr. Sidney Stoddard, all local artists of exceptional artistic gifts, were the solo vocalists. A great success was achieved by the the solo vocalists. A great success was achieved by the Spanish violinist Señor José Solér Gomez.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, conducted by Mr. Joseph H. Adams, gave in the Town Hall on February I an interesting revival of Mr. J. F. Barnett's 'Paradise and the Peri,' originally produced at the Festival of 1870. The whole performance reflected great credit on the executive, the choir especially distinguishing themselves in the realization of a beautiful tone and dramatic delivery. The orchestral accompaniments were rendered with care and with due regard to the singers, while artistic help wasgiven by the soloists, Madame Aston, Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Joseph Cheetham, a tenor new to Birmingham, and Mr. Thomas Howell.

At the Birmingham City Choral Society's second concert of the season, given in the Town Hall on January 30 under Mr. Thomas Beecham's conductorship, the principal work of the evening was Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The choir are entitled to much praise for the arduous work that fell to their share in having to contend against the strenuous playing of the orchestra. Miss Norah Newport sang, in the absence through indisposition of Madame Blanche Marchesi, the other principals being Mr. Anderson Nichol and Mr. Ernest Groom.

The Annual Welsh Concert given under the auspices of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church took place in the Town Hall on February 5, in the presence of a large and enthusiastic audience. The choir—on this occasion augmented to seventy voices—gave, under Mr. William Morris's conductorship, a number of part-songs with excellent artistic results, especially in German's 'O peaceful night,' Emlyn Evans's 'Ye captive tribes' ('The Captivity') and James's 'Land of my fathers.' Miss Gwladys Roberts created an extraordinary impression with her luscious voice and fascinating style. Miss May John, the possessor of a light but pleasing soprano voice, Mr. David Ellis and Mr. David Evans completed an excellent cast of principals. Mr. Charles Collier contributed several solos on the harp and also led his band of harps, and Mrs. W. G. Roberts was a reliable

Herr Max Fiedler, the distinguished Hamburg chef d'orchestre, made his first appearance here with the Hallé Orchestra at the Town Hall on January 20, in connection with the newly-formed Birmingham Orchestral Concerts. He created a remarkable impression by his masterly performance of Brahms's C minor Symphony and Strauss's Tod und Verklärung.' The vocalist was Miss Tilly Koenen. Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra provided an excellent programme at the concert on February 3, the chief features being Mozart's G minor Symphony, Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' and Schumann's Pianoforte concerto, with Madame Marie Fromm as the

The fifth concert of the season promoted by the Birmingham Concerts Society was given in the Town Hall on February 4, under Mr. George Halford's conductorship. The best result centred in the fine performance of Schumann's E flat symphony (the 'Rhenish') and Saint-Saëns's 'Le rouet d'Omphale.' Herr Ferencz Hegedus who introduced a beautiful Violin concerto by Tartini with fine cadenzas by Emmilio Pente-created a marked impression by his artistic playing.

Messrs. Mark, Jan and Boris Hambourg gave a matinée at the Prince of Wales Theatre on February 11, at which the only concerted piece was the Andante and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's D minor Trio, most exquisitely rendered. The audience was most enthusiastic, and nearly every item was encored!

The Birmingham Choral Union gave an excellent performance of the 'Messiah' in the Town Hall on February 15, under Mr. Thomas Facer's baton. Mr. C. W. Perkins presided at the organ, and the principals were Madame Laura Taylor, Miss May Seiber, Mr. Alban J. Cohen and Mr. William Evans.

The fourth and last Max Mossel Drawing Room Concert of the season was given at the Grand Hotel on February 13. The Max Mossel String Quartet gave excellent renderings of two String quartets—Schuberi's in D minor and Dvorák's in F major (Op. 96). Mr. Leonard Borwick was the solo pianist, and Madame Minadieu the vocalist. Mr. G. H.

Manton ably accompanied.

The Birmingham Victoria Male Choir gave its annual concert in the Town Hall on February 8 with great success.
The choir never sang better. Special mention should be made of the effective rendering of Protheroe's 'Spartan heroes,' Janin's 'King of worlds,' Rooke's 'Eventide' and De Rillé's 'The destruction of Gaza.' The solo vocalists were Madame Aston, Miss Grace Ivell and Mr. John Child. Mr. John Northwood conducted.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society gave an interesting 'Mozart' concert in the Town Hall on February 20 concert in the Town Hall on February 20, under Dr. Sinclair's exhilarating conductorship. The great feature was the first performance here of Mozart's Grand Mass in C minor. The chorus sang finely throughout, and the vocalists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Carrie Siviter, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Robert Radford. Mr. C. A. Perkins presided at the organ. The second part of the programme included Mozart's Motet No. 3, 'Glory, honour, praise and power.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was a large audience at the Victoria Rooms on January 25, when one of the Popular Concerts was held. Under the able direction of Mr. George Riseley the Society of Instrumentalists, with the aid of local professional musicians, interpreted several compositions: some well-known favourites, others being heard in the city for the first time. Special interest was felt in respect to Mozart's Violin concerto No. 7, which was introduced to the public a short time ago, Mr. Harold Bernard playing the solo instrument, the four cadenzas introduced having been written by him for the performance. The other unfamiliar work presented was the Viennese Dances by Beethoven. Of these, six were performed, the remaining five being reserved for the next concert. Other works were Mendelssohn's 'Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage 'overture, two movements from Massenet's 'Scènes pittoresques,' the Waltz and Pizzicati from 'Sylvia' (Délibes), 'Sous le balcon,' for strings (R. Wüerst), and the overture to 'Marta.' These compositions were agreeably rendered, and were highly appreciated by the hearers. The vocalists were Miss Madeline Applegate and the Apollo Class Singers (Masses Gay, Montes Deserged Theorem) Glee Singers (Messrs. Gay, Monks, Davey and Thomas), whose efforts were well received.

The Clifton Quintet at its concert on February 6 gave an excellent performance. The players were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). In March last, Debussy's String quartet in G. minor was introduced and obtained such a cordial. in G minor was introduced, and obtained such a cordial reception that it was repeated on this occasion, and again gratified the audience. Messrs. Parsons and Lewis displayed their ability in Rachmaninov's Sonata in G minor (Op. 19) for pianoforte and violoncello, and Mr. Parsons contributed Chopin's Fantasia in F minor (Op. 49). The other work included in the scheme was Brahms's Pianoforte quartet in A (Op. 26).

On February 8 an immense audience assembled at Colston Hall for the third concert of the Bristol Choral Society. The choir and band numbered upwards of 500 performers, and Mr. George Riseley directed the performance of two works which were received with much enthusiasm— Max Bruch's 'Lay of the Bell' (soloists, Madame Esta d'Argo, Miss Frederica Richardson, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Harry Dearth) and Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' (soloists, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and Harry Dearth). Both cantatas were admirably performed, especially the second, in which the choir was highly successful in its interpretation of the picturesque production. The second concert of the Bristol Symphony Orchestra was held at the Victoria Rooms on February 12. during the past twelve months, the Society includes professional players of Bristolt with some from Bath, the concerts being conducted by different musicians. On this occasion Mr. A. H. Peppin, music-master at Clifton College, was the conductor. There was a numerous attendance, and considerable enthusiasm prevailed in respect of some of the compositions performed. Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Wagner's Prelude to 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and Tchaikovsky's Valse from the opera 'Engen Onegin' and 'Marche Slave' (Op. 31) formed the chief features of the programme. Miss Edith Evans, the vocalist of the evening, effectively rendered Schubert's 'Die Allmacht' and 'Senta's ballad' from the 'Flying Dutchman.'

Liberal patronage was accorded to the concert in aid of the Postmen's Benevolent Fund, held at the Victoria Rooms on February 14. Among those who took part were Miss Nellie Ellis, Miss Ethel Hook, Mr. Frank Webster and Mr. Dan Price (vocalists), and Miss Marjorie Evans (the child violinist), with Mr. W. E. Fowler (accompanist). The performance was of a gratifying character, and several extras had to be given through the persistent applause.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Antient Concert Rooms, on January 23, the Dublin Philharmonic Society gave its first concert under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Marchant, organist of the conductorship of Mr. Charles Maichain, Organic C. St. Patrick's Cathedral. The works performed included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' (soloist, Miss Emilie Martyn) and Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' chorus ('Engedi'). In the absence of an orchestra the accompaniments were admirably played by Mr. Arthur Oulton. The choir, numbering upwards of 200 voices—formed partly from the recently disbanded Orpheus Choral Society — proved to be quite worthy of the occasion, and excellent work will be expected of them. Solos were sung by Miss Emilie Martyn, Mr. Dan Jones and Mr. Vine Sanderson.

On February 5 the Dublin Glee Singers, our oldest established Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Joseph Seymour), gave the first concert of their thirteenth season at the Antient Concert Rooms. An attractive programme of unaccompanied glees, madrigals and part-songs was well sung by the choir. Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees (solo violoncello), Mr. John G. Carroll (vocalist) and members of the Society were the soloists. Dr. Jozé and Madame Nolan O'Connell were the accompanists.

The North City Choral Society (conductor, Mr. George Harrison) gave a concert in the Rotunda Rooms on February 10, at which Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' (soloist, Miss Madeline Macken) and Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm (soloist, Miss Daisy Love) were the chief features. Miss Marie Dowse was the solo violinist, and Messrs. H. V. Love and J. V. Love played the organ and pianoforte accompaniments respectively.

Recitals have been given at the Royal Dublin Society by Mr. A. H. Fricker, organ (Bach's Toccata and Fugue in C, &c.), the Brodsky Quartet (Mendelssohn's String quartet or E. J., the broasky Quartet (Mendelssonn's String quartet in E flat, Op. 44, No. 3, Schumann's Quartet in A major, and, with Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees, Schubert's String quintet, Op. 153), Miss Annie Lord, pianoforte (Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C sharp, Brahms's 'Handel' Variations, Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Op. 31, No. 3, &c.), and Mr. Herbert Walton, organ (Mozart's 'Clock' fantasia, Bach's Passacaglia, &c.).

The Sunday Orchestral Concerts, under Dr. Esposito's spirited conductorship, seem to be firmly established in popular favour. During the month Madame de Vere Sapio, Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Miss Agnes Nicholls have given their services as soloists, and attracted very large audiences.

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave the first concert of its tenth season on February 13. Her Excellency the Countess of Aberdeen with a large party was present. The band, under Dr. Esposito, played Nicolai's 'Merry Wives of Windsor' overture, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G, for strings, Beethoven's seventh Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' suite.

M. Eugene Ysaye gave a violin recital on February 3, assisted by Mr. Charlton Keith, pianist, and Miss Bingham Hall, vocalist. On this his second visit to Dublin the Hall, vocalist. On this his second visit to Dublin the distinguished violinist's magnificent playing was greatly appreciated. The programme included Handel's Sonata in G minor and Mozart's Concerto in G major.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the eleventh of Messrs. Paterson & Son's Subscription Concerts, on January 27, Mr. Moonie's Choir was engaged. The interesting programme comprised Act II. of 'Tannhauser' and Scene 5, Act III., of 'Die Meistersinger,' being the first concert performances in Scotland of these excerpts from Wagner's operas. The singing of the choir was throughout a splendid exhibition of cultured choral art—the balance of parts, the flexibility and purity of tone, together with the alert responsiveness to the demands of the conductor (Mr. J. A. Moonie), being admirable. The principal soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Mr. Edward Davies, Mr. Lewys James and Mr. Arthur Winckworth. In the concerted music valuable help was rendered by Miss Amy Gallon (a member of the Choir), Mr. J. Davies, Mr. W. Harvey, Mr. E. Lucas and Mr.
S. P. Malcolm.

The programme for the twelfth and last concert of the series, on February 3, was by plébiscite vote. The works selected for performance were Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony, 'The Ride of the Valkyries' and the 'Tannhäuser' and 'Der Freischütz' overtures. Mr. Edouard de Reszke, the vocalist, roused the audience to enthusiasm by his renderings of the 'Catalogue' song from 'Don Giovanni,' Vulcan's song from Gounod's 'Philémon et Baucis,' Schumann's 'The Two Grenadiers,' and the Serenade from Gounod's 'Faust.'

On January 28 the Edinburgh String Quartet gave fine performances of works by Mozart (in E flat), Brahms (in B flat, Op. 67) and Beethoven (in G, Op. 18, No. 2).

At the third Harrison Concert, on February 1, Madame Albani and Mr. John McCormack were the chief attractions. The other members of the party were Miss Marie Stuart, Mr. Dalton Baker, Miss Vera Margolies (pianist) and the Alexandra Ladies' Quartet. Mr. Victor Marmont accompanied.

The programme for the third of the University Historical Concerts, given on February 6, was entitled 'A Concert of Music for the Organ in combination with the orchestra, and orchestral instruments.' Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Adolf Fischer, Liszt, Rheinberger, Albert Becker and Guilmant were the composers represented. The organist was Mr. Matthew Shirlaw; the band—selected from the Scottish Orchestra—was led by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, and Professor Niecks conducted.

For the second of his present series of Chamber Concerts, given on February 8, Mr. Ernst Denhof had the assistance of the Rosé String Quartet from Vienna, and, as vocalist, Mr. Gervase Elwes. The concerted numbers included Quartets by Haydn (in E flat, Op. 64, No. 6), Beethoven (in D, Op. 18, No. 8), and Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor. Mr. Elwes sang songs by Brahms, Blow, Anthony Young and Maude V. White. The accompanist was Mr. Edgar Barratt.

The second concert of the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society was given on February 10, Mr. T. H. Collinson conducting. The programme comprised the overtures to 'Prometheus' (Beethoven) and 'Stradella' (Flotow), Haydn's Symphony in E flat, 'Spring-time,' by Svembjörnsson, Mozart's Concerto in E flat for two pianofortes, and a pianoforte duet, 'Variations on a Theme of Haydn,' by Brahme. The pianite ware Mrs. William Vounce and by Brahms. The pianists were Mrs. William Younger and Mr. R. F. M'Ewen. Mr. A. Betts Brown was the vocalist.

Notice of the Jubilee celebrations in connection with the Edinburgh Choral Union must be deferred till next month.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the thirteenth classical concert, on January 28, the Choral Union and Scottish Orchestra gave a fine performance of the second act of 'Tannhäuser' and a selection from the third act of 'Die Meistersinger.' The choral portion of the works was sung with excellent effect, and the eleven solo vocalists included such experienced artists as Madame Ella Russell and Messrs. Edward Davies, Lewys James and Arthur Winckworth.

A special interest was attached to this concert, inasmuch as Mr. Joseph Bradley made his last appearance as conductor of the Choral Union. Such an occasion cannot be allowed to pass without placing on record the admirable service Mr. Bradley has rendered to the cause of choral music in Glasgow during his twenty years' connection with the Choral Union. With that body he has achieved many triumphs, thereby raising the status of the Society almost to the level of some of the English festival choirs. Mr. Bradley has been the recipient of many tokens, tangible and otherwise, of the esteem in which he is held here. On January 22 a banquet in his honour was given by members and friends of the Choral Union, when a cheque for £200 was presented to him, and on January 29 the ladies of the choir entertained Mr. and Mrs. Bradley at a reception and dance, when they presented Mrs. Bradley with a handsome piece of jewellery. Some biographical notes on Mr. Bradley will be found on p. 164.

The last Classical Concert of the season took place on February 4, when a first performance here of Handel's Concerto Grosso in B minor and two movements of Mozart's Horn concerto in E flat (Mr. A. E. Brain, soloist) was given. The programme likewise included Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony and the 'Meistersinger' overture. As solo routh symphony and the 'Meistersinger' overture. As solo vocalist, Mr. Edouard de Reszke proved a great attraction. The annual 'plébiscite' concert on February 8 brought the Choral and Orchestral Union's present season to a close. With the exception of Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben'—which headed the poll, although it was not included in the programme!—the pieces chosen were almost identical with past plébiscite selections, viz., Beethoven's fifth Symphony and the Leonora No. 3 overture, the Ballet Air in G from 'Rosamunde,' Mendelssohn's music to 'A midsummer night's dream' and the overture to 'Tannhäuser.'

On February 6 the Lansdowne United Free Church Musical Association, conducted by Mr. J. E. Hodgson, gave a highly successful rendering of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' Excellent work was done by the chorus and soloists, Mr. Joseph Lycett singing the music of the Prophet with fine dramatic effect. A very efficient orchestra, led by Mr. R. Daeblitz, with Mr. C. C. Dawson at the organ,

Mr. Maclean Borthwick, a local baritone vocalist with high artistic aims, gave his third recital on February 10. somewhat unique programme included no fewer than twenty-two songs, all by British composers; of these Granville Bantock's six 'Jester' songs and Dora Bright's settings of six songs from Kipling's 'Jungle Book' were brought to a first hearing in Glasgow. Another novelty on the programme was Parry's 'Partita' in D minor for violin and pianoforte, capitally played by Miss Bessie Spence and Mr. A. M. Henderson, the latter giving also three movements from D'Albert's Pianoforte suite in D minor. On February 12 the Athenaum Choral Society, under Mr. Alfred Heap, gave a praiseworthy performance of Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' in addition to some carefully-chosen madrigals and glees.

The students of Notre Dame Training College-an institution possessing an unbroken record of excellent choral achievements—gave three public concerts on February 19, 20 and 21. In addition to some vocal solos and instrumental 20 and 21. In addition to some vocal sorts and manufactures selections, the programme included Wilfred Bendall's 'The Lady of Shalott,' von Holst's songs from 'The Princess,' part-songs by Elgar and Miss Macirone, and Somervell's song-cycle 'Wind flowers,' all of which were charmingly rendered. Von Holst's songs merit a special word of praise as they were sung with beautiful blending and great delicacy and finish.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An interesting concert was given on February 5 by the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra, at which Herr M. Moszkowski conducted his Second Suite in G minor (Op. 47), the suite 'From foreign parts,' originally written for pianoforte duet, and the Pianoforte concerto in E (Op. 59), in which the solo part was finely played by Miss Dora Bright. The excellent playing of our local Symphony Orchestra deserves commendation, as does Miss May Currie, the vocalist of the evening.

At the eighth Philharmonic concert on January 28, Mr. Godowsky gave a poetical reading of Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in G, to which he contributed a cadenza. His brilliantly-played second solo was Chopin's Andante spianato and Polonaise in E flat (Op. 22), orchestrated by Xaver Scharwenka. Mr. Hamish MacCunn's orchestral ballad 'The ship o' the fiend' was performed for the first time at these concerts. Dr. Cowen also conducted Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony. The vocalist was Mr. John McCormack, and the choir had the rare compliment of an encore for their singing of Dr. Wood's part-song 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps.' The ninth concert, on February II, was devoted to Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri' and Act 2 of 'Tannhäuser,' two works which together required no fewer than ten principal and sub-principal vocalists, including Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Lillie Wormald, Madame Lakin, Mr. Samuel Masters, Mr. F. Braun, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. H. Earle and Mr. W. Wheatley, together with Messrs. H. Evans and A. Weber, two local singers who did well.

The death of Mr. Carl Courvoisier is recorded with regret. Well known as a violinist and teacher, he was born at Basle in 1846, studied under David, E. F. Richter, Kiel, and Joachim. Before settling in Liverpool he had had considerable experience as conductor of theatre-orchestras on the continent. The Schiever Quartet, in which Mr. Courvoisier played the viola, has suffered a heavy loss in the death of this amiable and accomplished musician.

On February 8, the Liscard Orchestral Society, which, under Mr. Philip Smart's direction, is doing good work, gave an interesting performance of Handel's Organ concerto in G minor, in which the solo part was skilfully played by the Rev. J. Nankivell. So rarely are organ concertos heard with orchestral accompaniment that it is hoped the Society will repeat the experiment. The orchestra of sixty performers (led by Mr. T. Rimmer) performed Rubinstein's 'Feramors' ballet-music and Wagner's 'Rienzi' overture. Miss Ethel Meggitt was an acceptable vocalist.

At the 143rd concert of the Socièta Armonica on January 22 the principal orchestral pieces were Bach's Overture in C. Dvorák's 'Heldenlied' and Tchaikovsky's 'Casse-Noisette' Suite. Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in C minor was well played by Miss Lilian Risque, and a young soprano, Miss Edina Thraves, made a distinctly favourable impression by her singing.

Mr. Albert F. Workman, who is re-establishing high-class subscription concerts in Bootle, gave a preliminary concert on January 27, at which Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Willy Lehmann (violoncello) and Mr. Arthur Cooke (pianoforte)

At the fourth Ladies' Concert of the Orchestral Society on February 15, Sibelius's 'Varsang' or 'Spring song' (Op. 16) was performed, and Brahms's Violin concerto, solo by Mr. Alfred Ross. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted. Special interest centred in the performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. The vocalist, Miss Grainger Kerr, sang with much acceptance J. S. Bach's Cantata for contratto 'Sound your knell, blest hour of parting,' a quaint and characteristic Bach air with a suggestive bell obbligato. Miss Kerr also sang three musicianly songs, with orchestral accompaniment, by Mr.

F. C. Nicholls, a local composer.

The fourth and final concert of an interesting series of Chamber Concerts in the Birkenhead Town Hall was given under Mr. Lawrence Atkinson's direction on February 18, when Madame Sobrino sang and Mr. Joska Szigeti played Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor.

MUSIC IN LUTON.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

Few towns in the home counties are more often ignored in the musical world, yet, paradoxically, are better provided with good musical societies, than Luton. The borough that provides straw hats for half the world possesses an oldestablished Choral Society, an Orchestral Society, and at least two other musical societies that annually perform works which are often beyond the capacity of the average choral society. Special attention is merited, however, by the concert given by the Luton Choral Society on February 5. Invoking the aid of Mr. Henry J. Wood and a considerable portion of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, the society presented to an audience of 1,000 people the most remarkable programme of music that has ever been heard in the local Plait Hall. In the unusual circumstances, orchestral numbers predominated. The only choral works were Dr. A. Herbert Brewer's ballad 'Sir Patrick Spens,' conducted by the composer, and Sir Hubert Parry's ode 'Blest pair of Sirens,' conducted by Dr. Fred Gostelow. So excellent was the choir that Dr. Brewer, who was loudly cheered, stated that he had not previously heard a better rendering of his ballad.

The orchestral performances were equally brilliant. Every item of a long programme was splendidly interpreted and greeted with enthusiasm. Perhaps never before has Mr. Wood enjoyed so moving a reception in the provinces. Mr. Fred Gostelow, who, through eight years of strenuous work as honorary conductor, has raised the Society to its present prosperity and perfection, also enjoyed a remarkable demonstration during the evening. He performed the solo part in Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte concerto in G minor with all due brilliancy, and was enthusiastically recalled. Vocal solos were contributed by Mrs. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Montague Borwell. The instrumental selections included Sibelius's symphonic poem 'Finlandia,' two of Brahms's 'Hungarian' Dances, Bach's Aria on the G string, and Schubert's ballet music from 'Rosamunde.'

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It somewhat detracted from the whole-heartedness of spirit that characterized the Hallé Jubilee Concert on January 30, that Dr. Richter was compulsorily absent, he being engaged in conducting the 'Ring' performances in London. His place, however, was again effectively filled by

Mr. Franz Beidler. As on the same date in 1858, the 'Der Freischütz' overture opened the concert, and the 'Jubilee' overture, both by Weber, closed it. The audience rose when the National Anthem finale of the overture was reached; and, when the opportunity came, crowned their loyalty with their enthusiasm. A bust of Sir Charles Hallé was placed conspicuously at the front of the platform. The symphony was Schubert's 'Unfinished.' Miss Irene Scharrer made a powerful impression in her playing of the Saint-Saëns Pianoforte concerto in G minor, of three Chopin Studies, and of a Scherzo by D'Albert, the last named as an encore. Mr. Herbert Brown was the vocalist. Prior to the concert a social gathering of the members of the Orchestra was held, to which were welcomed three of the members of the original orchestra—Mr. Jacoby (violin), Mr. Ambrose Lee (violin), and Mr. Edward de Jong (flute).

Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony came to its fourteenth performance at the concert of February 6; the other orchestral pieces being the Prelude and Liebestod from 'Tristan and Isolde,' and Liszt's symphonic poem, 'Tasso.' Master Ernst Lengyel, the solo pianist, startled us all with his display of musical appreciation as well as of technical skill in his performance of the Saint-Saëns Concerto in E flat, Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue in G, and, for an encore, Beethoven's Rondo (Op. 129).

Dr. Richter resumed the conductorship at the concert of February 13, and secured a delightfully inspiriting rendering of the Beethoven Symphony in A. The anniversary of of the Beethoven Symphony in A. The anniversary of Wagner's death was commemorated by the performance of 'Faust' overture; and with the singing by Mr. Plunket Greene of the Hans Sachs air, 'Was duftet doch der Flieder.' Mr. Willy Hess played Joachim's Violin concerto in D minor and the familiar Adagio of Spohr's No. 9 Concerto, Op. 55.
In the absence of Dr. Richter and Mr. Franz Beidler,

Mr. Granville Bantock conducted at the concert of February 17. The programme included the Beatrice and Benedict' overture of Berlioz, the orchestral arrangement of Delussy's Suite in G, and Dvorák's Symphony 'From the New World.' Madame Dora Bright played Mr. Moszkowski's Pianoforte concerto in E (Op. 59), the composer conducting, and Miss Nora Meredith was the vocalist.

At the concert of February 20, Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam' (Part I.) was performed, the composer himself conducting. The principals were Madam Crossley, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Hubert Brown. The principals were Madame Ada performance was probably the best to which Mr. Bantock has listened. The crowded audience gave a sympathetic welcome to the composer, and recalled him again and again at the close of the performance.

At the afternoon recital of the Gentlemen's Concerts on February 5, Mr. Robert B. Gregory-a native of Manchester, who has studied on the Continent-exhibited much technical skill as a pianist in playing Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, two of Schumann's 'Kreisleriana,' Chopin's Andante Spianato and Grand Polonaise in E flat (Op. 22), and-for the first time in this country, so it was announced—four Charakteristische Stücke by Heinrich Wottawa. The Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society upheld its fine reputation in the rendering of choruses and part-songs under the conductorship of Mr. Herbert Whittaker.

The programme of the Brodsky Quartet concert on February 4 consisted of Schumann's Quartet in A (Op. 41, No. 3), Mozart's Pianoforte quartet in G minor, and Schubert's String quintet in C (Op. 163). Mr. R. J. Forbes was at the pianoforte in the Mozart quartet and Mr. Leo Smith was second violoncello player in the quintet. At Mr. Brand Lane's concerts of February I and 15, the following artists appeared: Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Phyllis Lett, Madame Mary Conly, Miss Carmen Hill, Mr. Thorpe Bates and Mr. Plunket Greene (vocalists), Miss Evelyn Suart (pianoforte), and Mr. Mischa Elman (violin). In playing the Wilhelmi arrangement of Schubert's 'Ave Maria,' Mr. Elman, no doubt intentionally, as well as gracefully, honoured the memory of the distinguished violinist who has recently passed away. Mr. Arthur Catterall achieved honour in his own country at the Promenade Concert of January 25, when he played the first movement of Goldmark's Violin concerto (Op. 28), Ernst's 'Airs Hongrois,' and one of Fiorillo's Studies. Miss Annie Worsley was the vocalist. The orchestral selections included Bizet's overture | Faculty of Music in the University of London.

to Sardou's 'Patrie,' the same composer's 'L'Arlésienne' suite, two movements from Goldmark's 'Rustic wedding symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, and Elgar's 'Pomp and circumstance' march (No. 1, in D). At the concert on February 8, Sterndale Bennett's 'Naïads' overture was worthily played, in addition to Massenet's suite, 'Scenes pittoresques,' Glinka's Slav fantasia, 'Komarinskaya' (dance song), and the overture to 'Le domino noir.' A so-called 'Discourse' between flute, oboe and clarinet by Val Hamm proved a popular feature; but Gabriel Pierné's Concertstück for harp and orchestra—the harp extremely well played by Mr. Charles Collier, of the Hallé Orchestra— is made of more sterling stuff. The principal feature of the programme of the Vocal Society's concert on February 5, was Mendelssohn's 'First Walpurgis night,' with the director, Dr. Henry Watson, at the pianoforte.

The second of four French concerts was given on February 11. M. Henry Février, the modern composer introduced, is a versatile writer. An opera of his, 'Roi Aveugle,' was produced at the Opera Comique in 1903. At this concert the following compositions of M. Février were performed: A Pianoforte trio - by Messrs. Battala (pianoforte), Villers (violin) and Bazelaire (violoncello), the Andante from a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, two short pieces for violoncello, and a Nocturne and a Valse caprice for pianoforte solo. All these works showed nervous warmth of feeling as well as musicianly skill; but it is as a song composer that M. Février seems specially to excel. Some of these, nine in number, that were sung by Madame Mantelin (soprano) and Mr. Baehrens (baritone) were strikingly effective from an emotional point of view.

Mr. Egon Petri, Professor at the Royal Manchester College of Music, gave on January 27 the first of four recitals of Beethoven's Sonatas. At the second, on February 10, as at the previous performance, the large Whitworth Hall of the Victoria University was crowded. M. Petri's magnificent technical display excited great interest. In another direction Mr. Edward Isaacs set himself a not less trying task in his pianoforte recital on January 29, when, in addition to three cleverly written pieces of his own composition, a Staccato-Caprice, a Réverie, and a Scherzo-Fantaisie—he played Liszt's Sonata in B minor and Rubinstein's Theme and Variations (Op. 88).

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

First performances in Newcastle of Brahms's Second symphony, Debussy's 'L'après - midi d'un Faune' and Sibelius's suite 'Finlandia' were given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra on February 4, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. Unfortunately a condemnation of the exit arrangements on the occasion of the granting of the Town Hall license created a scare, which had an adverse effect upon the sale of tickets, and added another difficulty to the many which seem to prevent the establishment of a series of orchestral concerts here. As the Town Hall cannot be guaranteed for next season, and as there is no other available building, many musical arrangements must be held in suspense. Such a state of affairs is lamentable.

On the following evening the concluding concert of the Classical Concert Society was devoted to a superb pianoforte and violoncello recital by Miss Johanne Stockmarr and Professor Hugo Becker, who played sonatas by Beethoven and Brahms.

At the third Harrison Concert, on February 7, the vocalists were Madame Albani, Miss Marie Stuart, Mr. Dalton Baker, and Mr. J. McCormack, Miss Vera Margolies being the solo pianist. Three effective and pleasing 'Meditations,' composed by Mr. Alfred Wall for violin and pianoforte, were performed by the composer and Herr Oppenheim at the concert of the Newcastle Musical Society on February 12; Brahms's Pianoforte quartet and a Haydn String quartet were also performed, and Canon Hughes was an acceptable vocalist.

Dr. John Warriner has been elected a Member of the

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' by the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society on February 6 proved a great success. The delightful orchestral effects received ample justice, and the choral numbers were admirably sung. Mr. Allen Gill ably conducted a work which was most enthusiastically received—no small share of the happy result being due to his able guidance. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Maxwell and Mr. Dan Price; and

Mr. Lyell Taylor was an able leader of the band.

The Retford Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. H. C. Andrews, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' on February 6. The orchestra and chorus, which numbered 160 performers, gave a good account of themselves. The soloists were Madame Lucie Gillespie, Miss Dorothy Jenkinson and Mr. S. Hempsall, all of whom ably assisted in obtaining a careful and satisfactory rendering of the two works.

The Riddings and District (Derbyshire) Choral Society gave a successful and effective performance of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' on February 19. The soloists, who rendered valuable assistance, were Miss Olive Clare, Miss Gertrude Pegg, Mr. H. Beaumont and Mr. Harry Horner. The band, ably led by Mr. W. Whitehead, and chorus, numbered over one hundred performers. Mr. C. Cotton conducted in an efficient manner, Miss Alton was the pianist, and Mr. Munks presided at the organ.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second series of municipal competitions organized by the Sheffield Sunday School Union was held in the Montgomery Hall during the week commencing February 3. In the choral competitions a remarkable advance was noticeable in the quality of the singing as compared with the efforts of a year ago. The contest for senior choirs, which brought forward some admirable choral singing, finally resulted in the victory of the Tabernacle Choir (conductor, Mr. W. H. Dawn), who sang Coward's 'Lord, Thou art good,'and Rogers's 'The river floweth strong.' The classes for ladies'-voice choirs, male-voice choirs, and mixed quartets also produced some artistic and refined choral effects, and the junior choirs proved that excellent work is being carried on in the free churches of the city. The sight-singing tests were severe. That for choirs was an anthem with numerous modulations and a short fugue, the whole unaccompanied, specially written by Mr. C. Jessop. The winners were the John Street Church Choir, under Mr. N. Bingham. J. A. Rodgers was the adjudicator.

The Chesterfield and District Musical Union is a progressive, enterprising choral body, numerically powerful, and full of zeal. Mr. J. F. Staton, the conductor, has done such excellent work with his material as to justify the performance of so important a work as Elgar's 'King Olaf' on February 19. The members revelled in the music, which they sang with whole-hearted enthusiasm. The soloists they sang with whole-hearted enthusiasm. The soloists were Miss Eva Rich, Mr. W. Burrows and Mr. R.

A performance of 'The Creation' at Owlerton Church, conducted by Mr. J. W. Marriot, and two ballad concerts in the Albert Hall, organized respectively by Mr. Percy Harrison and Messrs. Wilson, Peck & Co., must be included in a record of the month's musical doings.

LEEDS.

The concert of the Philharmonic and Subscription series on January 29 had a programme selected by the vote of the on January 29 had a programme selected by the vote of the subscribers from a list of works compiled by Dr. Richter, who conducted a fine performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, the 'Don Juan' fantasia of Richard Strauss, the 'Lohengrin' prelude and 'Rosamunde' overture. Mr.

concerto, and the Philharmonic chorus, under Mr. Fricker, sang Bach's motet 'The Spirit also helpeth us' and the difficult part-song of Cornelius 'Grim death,' in fine style. The Municipal Orchestra on February I was heard in some delightful music of the old school-Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' and 'Figaro' overtures, and a Haydn symphony, one of the Paris period, in G. These were chosen as illustrations of the period with which the local branches of the 'Home Music Study Union' was then engaged, and this concert inaugurated a new plan which has been adopted in order to make the music given at the series more thoroughly appreciated. This is to be done by prefacing each concert with a lecture, given on the previous evening, and dealing with the principal works to be heard—their structure, orchestration, and so forth. These lectures are in connection with the Municipal School of Music, the appointment of whose staff has occasioned such heartburnings among local musicians, and they are to be given by prominent professional musicians of the town. Of especial interest was a novelty introduced at this concert, an orchestral tone-picture, composed by Mr. J. Weston Nicholl, entitled 'In English seas.' There can be Weston Nicholl, entitled 'In English seas.' no doubt of the expressiveness of the music, whose surging, swaying themes and sonorous orchestration are most suggestive. Contrast is wanting to make it musically effective, but in general character it answers its description very closely indeed. A most promising young singer was intro-duced at this concert in Miss Blanche Tomlinson, who, though her resources can hardly be fully developed, has a fine soprano voice, very even in quality, and she uses it very artistically. At the next Municipal Concert, on February 15, Beethoven's seventh Symphony was the centre piece of the programme, one of Stanford's 'Irish' Rhapsodies, the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'Meistersinger' overtures, and Tchaikovsky's 'Battle of Poltava,' being its other more important features.

The Rasch Quartet gave a concert on February 5, when Beethoven's splendid Pianoforte trio in B flat (Op. 97) was given, together with Brahms's first String quartet and movements from Quarters by Tchaikovsky and Glazounow. It is a matter for congratulation that Leeds can now boast of such espable string quartets as this and the Bohemian Quartet, which, on February 19, gave Quartets by Mozart (K. No. 590), and César Cui (Op. 68), and repeated the very interesting and beautiful quartet by Mr. Arthur Grimshaw, a Leeds musician, which was produced at these concerts three years ago. Another chamber concert of more than common interest was that given by a Leeds pianist, Miss Eisele, on February 8, when, with the help of that fine artist, the violoncellist Mr. Hugo Becker, she played sonatas by Brahms and Richard Strauss, while Mr. Becker's exceptional powers were shown in two movements of a Haydn sonata, the Adagio of Schumann's Violoncello concerto, and a display piece by Popper. On February 12 the Leeds Choral Union gave a concert of unaccompanied choral music, including Bach's fine motet 'Sing ye to the Lord' and Samuel Wesley's massive 'In exitu Israel.' Dr. Coward and Mr. Farrer Briggs conducted, and Mrs. Henry J. Wood, accompanied by her husband, was the solo vocalist.

A Harrison Concert on January 27, at which Madame Albani appeared, and the new tenor, Mr. J. McCormack, made his first appearance at Leeds, and one of Messrs. Haddock's Musical Evenings on February 18, when Miss de Benici was the pianist, sum up the Leeds concerts for the month. A series of performances of Sullivan's 'Iolanthe' by a local amateur society, under the direction of Mr. Percy Richardson, which began on February 18, deserves, however, to receive brief chronicle.

BRADFORD.

On January 25 the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, under Mr. Allen Gill, gave Mr. J. Weston Nicholl's symphonic poem 'Alastor,' which they had introduced among the native works played at the recent Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians. Like the sea-pictures referred to above, 'Alastor' is music which suggests a mood, in this case tragic and impassioned and well sustained. Two movements from Raff's Symphony, the 'Don Juan' fantasia of Richard Strauss, the 'Lenore' symphony, which is becoming rather worse for wear, 'Lohengrin' prelude and 'Rosamunde' overture. Mr. Tivadar Nachez played the solo part in Mendelssohn's Violin Mr. Allen Gill. The Subscription Concert on February 14 was, save for the 'Wanderer's storm song' of Richard Strauss, exclusively of Wagner's music. With the help of Madame Ella Russell and Mr. John Coates as soloists, the Hallé Orchestra and the chorus of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, Dr. Cowen conducted excellent performances of sundry Wagner pieces, of which the 'Grail' scene from 'Parsifal' and extracts from 'The Flying Dutchman' and 'Tristan' were the most conspicuous. On January 24 Miss Ada Sharp and Miss E. A. Atkinson gave a very interesting recital of violin and pianoforte music, including Sonatas by Beethoven (Op. 30, No. 3) and Brahms (Op. 108), and the whole of Schumann's 'Kreisleriana.' A similar concert was given by Mr. S. Midgley, with the co-operation of Mr. Catterall, the young Manchester violinist, on February 19.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Leeds Symphony Society—a body of musicians, many, if not most, of whom are engaged at the local theatres gave a concert at Harrogate on January 29 under Mr. Julian Clifford's conductorship, the programme including some of the most popular orchestral pieces, of which Beethoven's fifth Symphony was the chief. The keenness of the players was admirable. Some slight roughness, inevitable under the circumstances, will no doubt disappear, or be greatly reduced, as they familiarise themselves with music of a more subtle type than that to which they are accustomed. On February 1 the Huddersfield Philharmonic Orchestra, an amateur organization, gave a programme selected by plébiscite and including the 'William Tell' and 'Merry Wives of Windsor' overtures, and the 'Faust' ballet music, which went well under Mr. A. Pearson's conductorship. At the Subscription Concert on February, 4 Mr. Mark Hambourg appeared, and played some Chopin pieces with his usual exuberant virtuosity, and little Vivien Chartres played violin solos with wonderful freedom of style and beauty of

On January 23 Miss Gertrude Hobday gave a chamber concert in Wakefield, at which, with the help of Miss M. Clark and Mr. Hubert Withers, she gave a refined interpre-tation of Brahms's Trio in B, the early work as revised in his later period. On January 30 the last of the excellent Wakefield Chamber Concerts took place, Miss Kathleen Chabot's pianoforte playing being the chief feature of the programme.

The Hull Symphony Orchestra is continuing its interesting afternoon concerts, and that on February 20 was of special importance in that it included the first performance in this country of a tone-picture by Schjelderup, 'Sunrise over Himalaya,' an episode in a drama which is very suggestively treated. The whole programme on this occasion was new to Hull, and included Bizet's 'Roma' suite, a movement from Schumann's 'Rhenish' symphony, and Handel's fourth Organ concerto, which was played by Mr. J. A. Meale on the fine instrument which the Hull firm of Foster & Andrews recently built in the Queen's Hall. Mr. Wallerstein conducted.

ANTWERP.

Jan Blockx, the Flemish composer of several successful operas, including 'La Princesse d'auberge' and 'La fiancée de la mer,' has just produced a new work at the National Theatre here. It is entitled 'Baldie,' and appears to have been cordially received.

BERLIN.

A little more than ten years ago Humperdinck wrote incidental music to the play 'Königskinder.' He now intends to write an open, the libretto of which will be based on that play. He will therefore embody in it much, if not all, of the incidental music above mentioned. Great anxiety is felt for Dr. Hermann Kretzschmar, who is suffering from a severe attack of inflammation of the lungs. Felix Weingartner, owing to pressure of work at Vienna, was represented at two of the Symphony concerts by the conductors Robert Laug, from Hagen (Westphalia), and Leo Blech.

HAMBURG.

After many delays, which in the operatic world are not unusual, Siegíried Wagner's new opera 'Sternengebot' was produced at the municipal theatre on January 21. The impersonators of the principal parts were Madame Fleischer-Edel and MM. Birrenkoven and Dawison, and the performance under the direction of Capellmeister Gustav Brecker appears to have been excellent. The libretto, as usual, is written by the composer.

HEIDELBERG.

The Academical Vocal Society, which is now rehearsing Beethoven's 'Missa Solemnis,' under the direction of Dr. Philipp Wolfrum, has decided to devote an evening during the summer term to the compositions of Max Bruch.

MEXICO.

Ricardo Castro, director of the National Conservatory, who recently died after a short illness, was born at Durango in 1866. He studied in Europe, where he formerly gave many concerts. He returned to Mexico, and was only appointed director in December, 1906.

Richard Strauss recently conducted, with marked success, one of the concerts of the Academia Santa Cecilia. The programme included the 'Tristan-Vorspiel,' and the 'Don Juan' and 'Tod und Verklärung' symphonic poems. The municipal authorities have voted an annual sum of £2,000 to the institution, for the organization of popular concerts to be given in the Corea amphitheatre, which will seat 5,000 persons. An Italian newspaper says that, through this undertaking, 'Rome will contribute largely towards the progress of music in Italy.'——In Gabriele d'Annunzio's new drama 'La Nave,' produced at the Argentine Theatre in January, music plays an important part. Songs and dances are introduced, at the express desire of the poet, in order to accentuate the symbolism of the piece. The music, which is said to be very interesting, is from the pen of a young composer, Giovanni Zagari, a native of Parma. WIESBADEN.

Towards the end of January the musical section of the General Society of German Lady Teachers gave a 'Langhans evening' in honour of the composer and pianist, Frau Louise Langhans-Japha, now in her eighty-second year. The programme included songs, trios for female voices, a 'Romanze' for violin, and pianoforte solos. The venerable lady was persuaded to play two of her pianoforte pieces, and the energy she displayed was quite remarkable. Frau Japha received her first lessons at Hamburg, her native city, but in 1853 she studied pianoforte playing and composition at Düsseldorf under Clara and Robert Schumann.

The Bath Orpheus Glee Society gave its annual concert at the Assembly Rooms on February 17. The occasion was made memorable by the visit of Mr. Gervase Elwes, who most kindly came to take the solo part in Dr. Herbert Brewer's 'In springtime,' produced at last year's Leeds festival. The choir sang with great vivacity, and the work made a most favourable impression. The choir was no less successful in Elgar's well-known part-songs from the Greek Anthology, especially in 'Yea, cast me from heights' and 'After many a dusty mile.' Dr. Brewer's 'Love's philosophy' and Sullivan's 'The long day closes' were also given. Madame Amy Simpson was the lady vocalist, and the conductor, Mr. H. J. Davis, was warmly congratulated on the success of an enjoyable concert.

Mr. John Brinsmead died at his residence, Albert Road, Regents Park, on February 17, at the age of ninety-three. In recording, with regret, the death of this patriarchal manufacturer of pianofortes, it should be stated that he only survived his wife by six weeks. The seventieth wedding-day of this much respected pair was referred to in our issue of July last.

The Jubilee Number of the Bookseller makes its appearance in an attractive cover, one that reflects the attractive letterpress of its pages. Messrs. J. Whitaker & Sons, Ltd., of 'Whitaker's Almanack' fame, are to be warmly congratulated upon the Jubilee of their important and valuable periodical publication.

The Central London Choral and Orchestral Society performed Leoni's cantata 'The gate of life' at St. Andrew's Hall, Newman Street, on January 23. Both choir and orchestra acquitted themselves satisfactorily. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lewin, Mr. Frank Tebbutt and Mr. Harry Dearth. Mr. David J. Thomas conducted.

Mr. Denis O'Sullivan died recently at Columbus, Ohio, after an operation for appendicitis. This excellent operatic baritone had no equal in interpreting Irish music, and the news of his death, at the early age of forty, has been received with genuine regret.

Mr. F. Gilbert Webb discoursed on 'The vagueness of musical nomenclature' before the Musical Association on February 18. A summary of the paper will appear in our April issue.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either collated from local papers or furnished by correspondents.

ABERGAVENNY. — The Choral Society gave its annual concert on February 6 in the Town Hall. A selection from Handel's 'Samson' was performed with a miscellaneous second part, which included Suppé's Overture 'Morning, noon and night in Vienna,' Scènes Espagnoles 'Sevillana,' (Elgar) and the part-songs 'In this hour of softened splendour' (Pinsuti) and 'Summer-time' (W. W. Wilsdon. There was a small orchestra and the solo vocalists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Mr. Philip Ritte and Mr. Ernest Burgess.

BOGNOR.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms on January 29, when Stanford's 'Revenge' formed the main feature of attraction in a programme which included Weber's 'Der Freischütz' Overture and the Suite (Op. 49) by Saint-Saëns. The choir sang with good expression, and were well supported by the orchestra under the conductorship of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe. The solo vocalists were Miss Norah Newport and Mr. Thomas Gibbs.

BRAINTREE.—The Braintree and Bocking Institute Choral Society, which has been in existence for upwards of thirty years, gave a public performance of 'The death of Minnehaha' and 'St. John's Eve' on February 13, under the conductorship of Mr. James Newman, organist of St. Michael's Parish Church, Braintree. The solo vocalists were Miss Florence Holderness, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Walter Heal and Mr. Arthur Walenn. The orchestra consisted of twenty-eight performers, with Mr. George Wilby as leader, and Miss Bacon, an excellent harpist.

BRIGHTON.—Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society on February 6 at the Dome. The choir and orchestra responded zealously to the inspiriting conducting of Mr. Robert Taylor, under whose direction the Society has worked for so many years. A very able quartet of principal singers was found in Miss Margaret Adela, Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Charles Knowles.

CHISWICK.—The Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society gave its first concert at the Town Hall on January 27. The Society has been formed as the result of a desire for concerts of high-class music in the locality. Mr. David M. Davis was invited to organize a society, and some 150 vocalists and instrumentalists have now become members. Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' formed the first part of the programme and received an excellent interpretation, the choir and orchestra both giving evidence of careful training, which was exemplified in their attention to attack and expression. Madame Ellen Verrinder, Miss Maplesden-Young, Mr. Ben Calvert and Mr. Humphey Bishop were the solo vocalists.

The orchestra also played Weber's 'Oberon' and Mozart's 'Zauberfiöte' Overtures, a movement from Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, German's 'Henry VIII.' dances, and co-operated with the choir in 'Hail, bright abode,' from 'Tanqhäuser.' Mr. H. S. MacDermott led the orchestra, and Mr. David M. Davis was the conductor.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The fifth subscription concert of the Musical Union was held in His Majesty's Theatre on December 18. The chief features of interest in a varied programme were Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny.' The choir was also heard in Elgar's part-song 'O happy eyes' and Cowen's 'Rowing homeward,' and the orchestra played Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius March' and No. 1 of the 'Henry VIII.' Dances by Edward German. The soloists were Mrs. E. W. Pidgeon and Mr. R. F. Foster (vocalists), Mr. L. Bonnington (violoncello) and Mr. G. Bonnington (oboe). Dr. J. C. Bradshaw conducted as usual. The programme was repeated on December 19.

DEAL.—The first concert this season of the Deal and Walmer Musical Society took place on January 30 at the Theatre Royal, when Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm ('Come, let us sing') and Bridge's 'Flag of England' were performed. The choir also sang German's part-song 'O peaceful night' with excellent expression, and the orchestra was heard in Haydn's Military Symphony in G. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood and Mr. Henry Turnpenney, Miss Hylda Bruce Payne played some violin solos effectively, and Mr. J. Sterndale Grundy, to whom much credit is due for the general success of the performance, conducted.

Enniscorthy.—Two successful concerts were given in the Athenæum on February 5 and 6, under the direction of Dr. W. H. Grattan Flood. The principal attraction was Madame Fanny Bauer, the Irish-Australian soprano, who created a most favourable impression by her vocalism. Miss Orpen, a pupil of Senor Arbos, contributed some charming violin solos.

HENDON.—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed by the newly-formed Choral Society on January 27 in the Bell Lane Council Schools. The choir and orchestra, numbering 120, gave promise of good work as a result of conscientious training by Mr. Rimmer, who conducted, and the solo parts were undertaken by Miss Dorothy Cook-Smith, Miss Muriel Ashe, Mr. James Garner and Mr. Arthur Weber.

HINCKLEY.—The Hinckley and District Choral Society gave its first concert on January 30, when Elgar's 'Coronation Ode' formed the first part of the programme. The second part included Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and a selection from the 'Creation.' The soloists were Miss Marie Fairs, Miss F. S. Harrison, Mr. C. W. Fredericks and Mr. W. R. Batey. The conductor was Mr. Paul Rochard.

HYTHE.—The Choral Society gave its second concert on January 29. The programme included Locke's 'Macbeth' music, C. H. Lloyd's 'Song of Balder' and W. H. Speer's 'Jackdaw of Rheims.' Miss Dorothy Baxter was the soprano soloist, and Dr. Archer J. Froggatt conducted.

ILFORD.—At the Congregational Church on January 26 Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was performed in the presence of a congregation which completely filled the church. The church choir was supported by a capable orchestra, ably led by Mr. James Easton. The soloists were Miss F. Rattray, Miss Clara Ainsworth, Miss Winifred Ayton and Mr. Willett V. Dalton. Mr. L. C. F. Robson presided at the organ, and Mr. Walter J. Walls conducted.

LIMPSFIELD.—The Limpsfield and Oxted Choral Society gave a concert on February 12, when Stanford's 'The Revenge' was successfully performed by a choir of seventy voices. The Celtic Quartet contributed Glazounow's 'Novelletten' and Mendelssohn's Quartet No. 1, in E flat (first two movements). The tone and ensemble of this Quartet was particularly good. Mr. Gilbert Ledger conducted.

LOUTH (LINCOLN).—The members of the Louth Choral Society gave their only concert of the present season on February 13 at the Town Hall, Louth, when Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed. The choir gave a satisfactory and creditable account of the choruses, whilst the orchestra, led by Mr. J. E. Hilton, did able service. The solo vocalists were Miss Mary Lund, Miss Ethel Stephenson, Mr. Wilfrid Hudson and Mr. R. R. Morris. Mr. Owen M. Price conducted.

MACCLESFIELD.—A successful performance of Parry's cantata 'The Pied Piper' was given by the Philharmonic Society, in the Drill Hall, on February 19. The second part included the overture 'Fra diavolo' by the orchestra, and German's part-song, 'The Chase,' by the choir. The solo vocalists engaged were: Miss Carrey Kershaw, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Charles Tree. Dr. J. W. Jackson conducted.

OLD HILL (STAFFS).—The Musical Society gave its annual concert on February 13 in the Trinity Schools, when the programme included 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha,' Max Bruch's 'Ave Maria' and Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. These works were well performed, the choir singing with intelligence, reflecting credit on their trainer, Mr. A. H. Bassano, and the orchestra giving capable support in the cantatas and an admirable rendering of the Symphony. Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. Sidney Stoddard were the solo vocalists, and Mr. George Halford conducted.

PENTRE.—The Moriah Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. O. T. Jones, performed Haydn's 'Creation' at the Workmen's Hall on January 30 and February I. The choir showed a marked improvement on its performances of last year, and gave an excellent rendering of the choruses. The solo vocalists were Miss E. Sheppard, Mr. R. Jones and Mr. Walter Scott. The accompaniments were played with care and finish by Mr. Percie G. Smith's orchestra, and Mr. J. T. Jones rendered valuable assistance at the pianoforte.

POOLBROOK (Malvern).—Miss Marion Barlow's Choral Society gave a concert at the Foley Institute on February 18, when the first part of the programme consisted of Macfarren's 'May Day,' with orchestral accompaniment. The solo-part was sung by Miss Mabel Cox.

PORTH.—Leoni's 'Gate of Life' was performed on February 6 and 8 by the Bethlehem Choir under the conductorship of Mr. W. Howell, the soloists being Madame S. M. Lewis-Davies and Messrs. Harry Lewis and W. Trevor Lewis. The orchestral accompaniments were very effectively rendered by Mr. Percie G. Smith's orchestra, and Messrs. R. Howell and D. Evans presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively. The choir of 100 voices showed that great intelligence had been brought to bear in training, and the performance reflected credit on all concerned.

READING.—The eighth concert of the Reading Free Church Choral Society took place in the large Town Hall on February 19, when Elgar's 'Caractacus' was performed for the first time here. Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. Albert Garcia and Mr. Greeves Johnson formed an efficient quartet of vocalists, and a band and chorus, numbering about two hundred, gave an effective rendering of the work under the direction of the conductor, Mr. A. W. Moss, with Mr. F. G. Goodenough at the organ.

Redbourn.—The Choral Society gave its first concert on January 29, when Anderton's 'Wreck of the Hesperus' was the principal feature of the programme. The choir of forty voices was supported by a small but capable orchestra, and did excellent work under the conductorship of Mr. S. Skillman, the solo vocalists being Miss Maud Wright and Mr. J. M. Macarthy.

RHYMNEY.—The Gwent Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Daniel Owen, gave two performances of Sullivan's 'Light of the World' on February 10 and 11 at the Victoria Hall. The choir of 180 voices sang with much expression, and the solo vocalists were Madame Davidson, Miss Winifred Lewis, Mr. J. E. Jones and Mr. Ivor Foster.

ROMFORD.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' in the Corn Exchange on February 6, under the conductorship of Mr. John Challis. The choir sang throughout with spirit, giving evidence of careful training, and there was an excellent orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Mabel Manson, Madanie Annie McBride, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. R. E. Miles.

Ross.—A successful concert was given by the Choral Society on February 4, in the Corn Exchange. Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' was performed, followed by a miscellaneous second part, which included a part-song composed by Mr. H. M. Goodacre, the hon. conductor of the Society. Unfortunately Mr. Goodacre was taken ill just prior to the concert, his place being filled by Mr. Woodward, organist of the parish church, Ledbury.

SANDBACH.—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert on February 4, when the first part consisted of Haydn's 'Spring' ('Seasons') and Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' In both these works the choir displayed the results of careful training by the conductor, Mr. H. J. Lea, and the orchestra rendered efficient aid. The solo vocalists were Miss Lillie Wormald, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Hamilton Harris. The second part included Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture and Edward German's Three dances from 'Tom Jones.'

SCUNTHORPE.—The Choral Society gave its annual concert at the Public Hall on February 11, when Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' was the principal feature. In this both choir and orchestra rendered excellent service, and the solio wocalists were Madame Marguerite Gell, Miss Jennie Ellis, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Herbert Brown. Mr. F. C. Nicholson conducted.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—The new Choral Society gave its first concert on February 12 in the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre. The choir, numbering 110 voices, under the conductorship of Mr. G. W. Webb, gave a very creditable interpretation of Stanford's 'The Revenge,' and Morley's 'It was a lover and his lass.' Miss Clara Smith and Mr. Dan Harrison were the solo vocalists, and Dr. Ernest Carter played Hullweck's Gavotte for violoncello. The orchestra (led by Mr. H. A. Heden) played Tchaïkovsky's 'Elégie' and Sir Hubert Parry's Suite for strings, which were much appreciated.

Wellington (N.Z.).—The Musical Union gave 'Israel in Egypt' for its Christmas concert, the choral singing being especially distinguished for its vigour and accuracy. The oratorio had been given only twice previously in Wellington, at intervals of several years, each time under the direction of the present conductor, Mr. Robert Parker. The solo vocalists were Mrs. F. P. Wilson, Mrs. Mitchell, and Messrs. E. J. Hill, E. J. Parkes and Harold Widdop. Mr. Lawrence Watkins presided efficiently at the organ, and Herr Max Hoppe led the orchestra.

Answers to Correspondents.

SUB-BASS.—Considering the source of Handel's so-called 'Largo,' it hardly seems likely that any self-respecting musician would arrange it as an anthem. In its original form it is a little air from Handel's opera 'Serse' or Xerxes'), and sung by some youth or maiden under a favourite plane tree. The singer invokes protection for her beloved tree, and asks if ever leaves were dearer or shadesweeter. The words of the air are:

Ombra mai fù Di vegetabile, Cara ed amabile Soave più.

The original key of the song is F, but G is the key of the arrangement for solo violin, harp, organ, and orchestra by Joseph Hellmesberger, by whom it was designated 'Largo.' An early, if not the first, performance of the piece in this form was at the Crystal Palace Saturday concert of March 17, 1877. 'Serse' was one of Handel's latest operas. He began it the day after Christmas Day, 1737 (in that year a Sunday!), and it was produced on April 15, 1738.

L. R. A. M.—Your 'argument that a person who is truly musical would not care to listen to pianola playing' is entitled to respect; but at the same time it is no proof that a pianolaist is not truly musical because he (or she) is 'a mechanic.' There are plenty of mechanics who are very musical, and there are not a few musical people who are very mechanical.

- G. L. M.—The following practically come within your enquiry for 'works for church purposes (arranged or original) for organ, strings, quartet of brass, and drums': 'Adoramus Te,' by Hugh Blair, arranged for small orchestra, strings, brass and organ; and 'In Te, Domine, speravi' (Op. 24), by J. W. C. Hathaway, for strings, brass, drums and organ.
- A. G. M.—The title and address of the Berlin Conservatoire is Akademische Hochschule für Musik, Fasanenstrasse 1, Berlin-Charlottenburg. We cannot differentiate between the Conservatoires of Berlin, Dresden and Leipzig. Each has its merits, and more or less specialises in the course of instruction given.
- J. P. H. In order successfully to prepare for the examination of the Licentiateship of the Royal Academy of Music (Teacher of Singing), it would be most desirable for you to take some lessons of a good teacher. The books you have are excellent, but they should be supplemented by oral instruction.
- LENTO. Christian Sinding was born at Königsberg, Norway, on January 11, 1856; Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff at Novgorod, Russia, on April 2, 1873 (new style); and Wilhelm Backhaus at Leipzig, March 26, 1884. The last-named can scarcely be considered an Englishman, at least by birth.
- S. P.—Whatever may be the merits of your setting of 'Abide with me,' there would seem to be little chance of its displacing the popular setting of Dr. W. H. Monk's 'Eventide.' The change of tonality in your tune is foreign to the calm serenity of Lyte's beautiful lyric.
- E. W.—The following speeds are suggested for the works you name: Schumani's 'Album for the Young,' No. 7, dotted crotchet = 116, and No. 15, dotted crotchet = 56; Bach's Two-part Invention, No. 8 in F, crotchet = 144; Sterndale Bennett's Rondino in E, crotchet = 100.

ARCARE.—We are afraid that the accentuation of your hymn-tune does not suit the tranquillity of the words: the crotchets in complete bar 5 are anything but restful compared with the long notes in the following three bars.

CLEMENT.—Your hymn-tune is not unpleasing, though it is not an ideal setting of 'Lord, I would own Thy tender care,' regarded from the point of view of a children's hymn. The last line is not quite original, we fear.

- P. H. T.—Music for the concertina is published by Messrs. Wheatstone & Co., 15, West Street, Charing Cross Road. So far as we know it is not possible to obtain any degrees in music through the playing of that instrument.
- L. M. G.—Sir John Stainer's 'Music of the Bible' is out of print. It might be obtained (second-hand) from Mr. W. Reeves, 83, Charing Cross Road, or Mr. M. Middleton, Dr. Johnson Passage, Bull Street, Birmingham.
- P. E.—We have never heard of a sightless member of a cathedral choir, though the possessor of a really good voice might not find his blindness an obstacle to the discharge of this duties.
- W. J. R. D.—Portraits of the musicians you mention have appeared in The MUSICAL TIMES as follows: Sir Walter Parratt, July, 1902; Dr. H. C. Perrin, June, 1906; and Dr. Davan Wetton, June, 1902.
- J. H.—Your eight lines on 'The old, old Hall' are on a subject that has often provided material for doleful ballads of the dear deceased daughter description. Why not rhyme upon some more joyful theme?
- G. T. M.—'With verger clad' is probably a creation of your friend's fancy. 'With verdure clad' is doubtless meant.

QUAVER.—The March from Raff's 'Leonore' Symphony has not been arranged for the organ.

'AN AMATEUR BANDSMAN' is thanked for the information that Messrs. Wright & Rounds, Erskine Street, Liverpool, publish a book, dealing with everything regarding bands, entitled 'The Amateur Band Teacher's Guide,' price 2s. This may be useful in reply to the enquiry of 'M. J. K.' in last month's issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, p. 119.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success." — Sheffield Independent

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City' and ether of the composer's works.

Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

"Mr. Gaul is an experienced organist, and his series of organ works now in process of publication will doubtless have a great sale. All are written in the melodious manner to which the legion of admirers of Mr. Gaul's genius are accustomed. All organists should place these graceful works beside the movements of Henry Smart, another English musician whose name is honoured in the organ galleries."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

EDITED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls") and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of shert repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.-STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

TIMES.

TIMES.

It has been revised and, of course, re-scored, but the fact that it bears the Opus No. 1A may indicate that in general plan it is to be considered as really belonging to the composer's childhood. It is very easy to see a great many of the little devices by which the man has improved the boy's work: effective harp passages and points of imitation speak to every hearer of 1907 rather than of 1860, but the freshness of the main ideas, the vivacity of contrast in the last movement between the fairies and the giants, and the pretty thought embodied in the section called "Fairy Pipers," breathe of a boyish imagination. . . . The clever "Sun Dance" seems to have walked straight out of Tchaikovsky, and the "Giants" straight out of the "Rheingold"; the resemblance in the former case is no doubt due to the orchestration of the adult composer, but the latter must be another instance of independent invention by two composers.

STANDARD.

STANDARD.

The suite begins with a short overture, and consists of six pieces. The remarkable point about them is that the melodic invention is wonderfully fresh and individual. They are, of course, slight, but in more than one place there is evidence of the skilled musician. Whatever additional effects have been secured by the matured hand and brain of the composer—whose skill in orchestration and colour is one of his chief qualities—the tunes themselves are full of charm and individuality. They show undoubtedly the promise that has been so amply fulfilled by the composer, but they also stand out as among the most fluent and spontaneous melodies that he has ever written.

MORNING POST.

The suite is entitled "The Wand of Youth," and is one of the most charming and graceful efforts imaginable. Dr. Elgar has apparently used only the thematic material of the suite in its early form: its present development and orchestral treatment are that of a master hand. The Elgar of 1860 and the Elgar of to-day harmonise well together. With the adoption of a sane simplicity in the subject-matter, and the same concentration of harmonic power upon such unassuming themes, a perfect style would be provided for the setting to music of a purely child's story like that of "Peter Pan."... The "Sun Dance" and the "Slumber Scene" are particularly distinctive; the one by its rhythmic quaintness, the other by its peculiar appropriateness and the beauty of its orchestration.

DAILY NEWS.

The music of the suite is singularly original, with the exception of an avowed "Old Style" minuet and the Mendelsonhian scherzo manner of the "Sun Dance." The most taking of the six sections is the movement entitled "Fairy Pipers," which has a second subject of haunting beauty. A "Slumber Scene" also foreshadows the Elgar of the "Dorabella" variation in the "Enigma" set. The little suite represents a side of the composer which is not to be detected in his very latest compositions. It rather suggests that he should have long since written a light opera. "The Wand of Youth" may be warmly commended to the attention of conductors of amateur orchestras.

OBSERVER.

Leaving the orchestration—which is the result of the composer's matured powers—out of the question, these pleasing and graceful pieces show a melodic invention truly wonderful for a boy of twelve. . . . The "Serenade" and the "Slumber Scene" must be picked out as specially charming and wholly characteristic of the musician who wrote the delicate "Dorabella" variation. These two numbers foreshadow in a remarkable way the gift for pure melody shown in the popular violin piece, "Salut d'Amour," which was one of the first compositions to bring Elgar into prominence.

In Sir Edward Elgar's new suite "The Wand of Youth"—as far as structure and design are concerned, a work in miniature—childlike simplicity and charm march band in hand with ingenious imagination and consummate knowledge of effect. . . This revised version of one of the composer's earliest works, showing at once the fancy of the boy and the mastery of the man, was excellently played and very well received.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a much more consistent work than one would have expected in the circumstances: some of the movements are full of grace and charm, and all are beautifully scored. The Overture is delightfully fresh and vigorous, and there is piquancy and originality in the "Sun Dance," especially in the orchestration of the latter part: while the final movement, "Giants and Fairies," has a great deal of fancy and fine swing.... The suite, as a whole, will be a welcome addition to the repertoire.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The work has both the exhibaration and the gravity of childhood, and affectionately are the "Minuet," which shows the young Elgar already under the influence of Bach; the "Sun Dance," which might be the germ of one of the "Enigma" Variations, Nos. 3 or 4, so typical in their delicate remoteness of the later musician, and "Fairles and Giants" in its fine fantastic pomposity.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The seven short movements are very characteristic of the composer, especially in the fanciful orchestration, which is as happily done as anything of the kind from his pen.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

It is interesting to notice how early the characteristic Elgarian idiom seems to have manifested itself, some of the phrases and melodies of the suite being remarkably similar to those which we have long since become familiar with in the composer's later works—and also how little of it is in any marked degree suggestive of other composers or in any way derivative. Elgar was apparently himself from the beginning.

GLOBE.

The "Serenade," the "Sun Dance," "Fairy Pipers," and the "Slumber Scene" are full of dainty fancies charmingly expressed, and the suite ought to become popular.

YORKSHIRE POST.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The themes possess a significance and, in several instances, a charm that, treated with Sir Edward's present resource, result in a most attractive work that will probably become very popular. It opens with a short and energetic Overture, built up with two well-contrasted themes of vivacious character. This prepares the way for an Andantino, a serenade of happy sentiment also possessing attractive melodies. The next number is a Minuet, written in "the olden style"; it is dainty, and charmingly suggestive of tenderness and courteousness. To this succeeds a "Sun Dance," which is replete with exuberant life. It has three subjects, the third of haunting melodiousness. In the next movement, the music becomes more tranquil. It is headed "Fairy Pipers," and there is written in the score, "Two fairy pipers pass in a boat, and charm them to sleep." . . The piece is delicately scored, but still more subtle effects are produced in the sixth number, a "Slumber Song," played almost entirely pianissimo, and of fascinating dreaminess. The Finale is headed, "Fairies and Giants." . It begins lightly and softly with a rhythmic theme, which, after brief development, is succeeded by another subject equally gay and attractive. The giants motif is as didactic and heavy as those of the fairies are capricious and captivating, and dramatic interest is thus set up which is deftly handled by the composer until a brilliant Coda brings the suite to an effective conclusion.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The pleasing melodies, the freshness and ingenuity of the treatment, and the many happy thoughts in the scoring will commend it to music-lovers. . . . The breezy and melodious overture, the original, impetuous "Sun Dance," the charming "Serenade," and the fanciful and vigorous finale ("Giants and Fairies") are quite worthy of their author, and show that a great composer can make light music valuable. The suite was received very enthusiastically.

A HANDBOOK

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

ERNEST A. DICKS.

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

ORGAN CONCERTOS

SET I., OP. 4

EDITED BY

G. S. HOLMES

(B.A., Mus. B. Oxon.).

IN ONE VOLUME, FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

These Concertos have been carefully adapted from the full score (Chrysander's Edition) for the organ alone. Handel's somewhat scanty marks of expression have been supplemented by suggestions of the Editor—printed in smaller type and in brackets, to distinguish them. Metronomic rates, etc., have also been inserted as suggestions. This volume is indispensable to all who wish to use an edition which aims at being as faithful as possible to the composer's text and intentions.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause. other cause.

PUZZLED PIANISTS.

Much misconception exists as to the proper use of "limpness" of arm in pianoforte playing. Although one cannot play with stiff fingers and hands, the principle of using limpness throughout, as often taught in America and elsewhere, is only one degree better; for many piano passages stiffness of arm is indispensable. Broadly speaking, without "limpness" good tone is impossible, without arm stiffness great rapidity and brilliancy are unattainable. The Macdonald Smith System first gives the pianist complete control over the greatest possible "devitalization," and then teaches when the wrists and arms must be kept limp and when strongly stiffened.

The critic of Musical Opinion writes: "Mr. Samuel Masters was the tenor. At the time of his first coming out I had occasion to express my opinion pretry strongly as to his great merits as a concert singer, and now he has blossomed into a Handelian tenor of marked value. I was pleased beyond measure by his delivery of the two great and difficult airs which Handel assigned to the Jewish hero."—Musical Opinion, April. 1002. April, 1907.

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

"ELIJAH." Dublin, November 20, 1907.

"The way to read a part was shown by Mr. Montague Borwell, the baritone. He varied his tone and methods admirably; the many fine points he exhibited without intruding are far too numerous to detail. The most notable was the degree of derision he conveyed in the phrase "Call him louder"—as fine a vocal touch as it is possible to obtain. Two other very striking bits of declanation were the passages beginning "I never troubled Israel's peace" and "O Thou Who madest Thine angels spirits." Then what a picture he called up by the way he sang the one word "Jerebel."

Mr. Borwell was encored for "It is enough," but his singing was on the same high level throughout, and was a remarkably illuminating study of the part."—Dublin Mail, November 21, 1907.

WARWICK MUSICAL SOCIETY: "HIAWATHA."—"The soloists were Madame Siviter, Mr. John Coleman and Mr. Alfred Heather. The two first-named, it will be remembered, appeared together in the performance of 'Faust' at Warwick some time ago; while Mr. Coleman had delighted a local audience in the title-rôle of 'Caractacus.' Mr. Coleman was a distinct success on Monday, singing as he did with admirable expression and great ability. In the 'Death of Minnehaha' his vocalization was marked by a depth of feeling which enlisted sympathy irresistably, and which proclaimed him the true artist he is."—Warwickshire Advertiser, February 29, 1908.
TODMORDEN MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"The artistes engaged were Miss Emily Breare, and a young bass who is rapidly coming into notice both as a vocalist and composer, Mr. Johnes Coleman of Lichfield Cathedral. CLARA NOVELLO.

Born, London, June 10, 1818. Died, Rome, March 12, 1908.

The death of Clara Novello (Contessa Gigliucci) -which we record with deep regret-closes the long life of a great queen of song and removes the last member of a family distinguished in literature The fourth daughter of Vincent and Mary Sabilla Novello, Clara Anastasia was born in The Revolution of 1830 suddenly terminated her a house in Oxford Street which stood on or about studies at Paris, and the child-singer returned home

London Railway. Her innate musicianship manifested itself at the tender age of three, when she startled her parents by correctly singing the melody of 'Di tanti palpiti,' which she had heard played on a barrel-organ in the street. Her father used often to call her to the pianoforte to sing, with her doll in her arms, some air of Handel's or Mozart's which he had taught her. At the age of nine she was sent to school at York, where she studied under a Miss Hill and Mr. John Robinson of that city. Two years later, at the early age of eleven, she became a pupil not at the Paris Conservatoire, as has been stated, but at the Institution Royale de Musique classique et religieuse, Paris, of which M. Choron was the Mrs. Cowden-Clarke, director. in her 'Life and Labours of Vincent Novello,' thus describes her little sister's experience upon entering that Government-aided French the institution in capital:

So young was the childish candidate, that she had (rather against the grain of her little ladyship's dignity!) to be placed on a stool when the first public performance of the pupils took place after Clara had gained her election; yet so potent was the youthful voice, so assured was the musical execution, that her umpires at once decided in her That stool was the first step of her steady ascension to the throne of vocal supremacy. The father had reason to congratulate himself on the thoroughly in the elements of her art; for she acquitted herself with a self-possession and certainty that won her immediate success. Her judges were almost as much amused as pleased with the business-like, quiet, unfluttered manner of the child, in the delivery of her competitive exercise and piece. She sang these as though she had been accustomed to face an audience for years, instead of having seen but a few summers since her cradle. As an indication of the full tone and unwavering style which characterised Clara's singing even at that early age, -one of her judges chancing to hear the little girl sing in an adjoining room on the eve of the trial-day, thought it was a girl of sixteen, and could hardly believe his eyes when he beheld the blue-eyed English child in a white frock who had just been performing Arne's 'Soldier tired' with that confident brilliancy and rich roundness of voice. The weight and wealth of tone, with purity and precision in Clara's high notes, were as remarkable then as they have been ever since,-silvery, bell-like, clear, and ringing.

firm basis he had given to his little girl's education in grounding her the firm basis he had given to his little girl's education in grounding her for the postession of Mr. Augustus Littleton, was presented to the late Mr. Henry Littleton, at Genoa, January 7, 1880, by Miss Sabilla Novello, for whom the portrait was painted.

under Vincent Novello's hospitable roof, many men and women of learning and genius met. Among them may be mentioned Charles and Mary Lamb, Shelley, Keats, Leigh Hunt and Copley Fielding, in addition to Mendelssohn, Malibran, and others.

The dictionaries and recent obituary notices of Clara Novello state that she made her first public appearance at a concert at Windsor in the year 1833: as a matter of fact, the actual date is October 22, 1832. The concert, which took place at the Theatre Royal, was for the benefit of Mrs. Sewell, 'a struggling widow' and a daughter of C. F. Horn, a former organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The King's private band gratuitously attendant on merit, the good result of well-directed study was perceived in all she did. The voice is sweet, and her intonation perfect. Her first effort was in Spohr's charming duo, 'Forsake me not in this dread hour.' Mr. Vaughan sang with her, and a fine specimen it was of real concert singing. It requires some knowledge of the science to appreciate fully such a composition, and the absence of the too fashionable shakes, turns, and extravagant ornaments, rendered it not likely to excite tumultuous applause; but we advise our young aspirant to pursue an undeviating course in the refined and classical style of her father, and ultimate great success and fame must be hers. A native of Italy gave us the following impromptu:

rendered their assistance, Mrs. Anderson was (Clara's brother-in-law)—Lamb, one of the most the solo pianist, and Vincent Novello and unmusical of men, wrote: 'We heard the music in Thomas Welsh conducted. Clara sang 'Hush! ye pretty, warbling choir ' (Handel), 'O'er hill and dale' (Novello), and took part in two glees, 'The gipsies' (Welsh) and 'Ye spotted snakes' (Stevens). The Windsor and Eton Express referred to the youthful débutante in a 'critique which has been sent to us by a mutual friend':

This young lady, we are informed, has had the advantage of a very liberal education, and although it was her début, and she evidently suffered under that alarm which is ever | Times, April, 1902, p. 236.

On Christmas-eve in the same year (1832) she was the principal soprano in the first performance in this country of Beethoven's Mass in D, a remarkable achievement for a girl only fourteen years of age.* In the following year (1833) she sang in London at the Vocal Concerts, the Ancient Concerts, the Philharmonic Society, and at certain benefit concerts, also at the Worcester Musical Festival, she being then under fifteen. It is recorded that, at Worcester, 'Miss Clara Novello did herself much credit, and the beautiful quality of her voice and excellent style of singing were fully appreciated.' On that occasion S. S. Wesley made his first festival appearance.

The Royal Musical Festival at Westminster Abbey on June 24, 26, 28, and July 1, afforded the gifted young soprano an opportunity of demonstrating her powers in oratorio music. Moreover, her appearance on that important occasion drew from Charles Lamb a choice specimen of his exquisite fooling. the Abbey at Winchmore Hill, and the notes were incomparably soften'd by the distance. Novello's chromatics were distinctly audible. [V. Novello was one of the organists.] Clara was faulty in B flat. Otherwise she sang like an angel. The trombone, and Beethoven's waltzes were the best. Who played the oboe?' Although, according to Charles Lamb, 'Clara was faulty in B flat,' she inspired him to write one of his most characteristic poems, which first appeared in the Athenæum of July 26, 1834, a few weeks after the Abbey performances. The lines read:

To Clara N-

The Gods have made me most unmusical, With feelings that respond not to the call Of stringed harp, or voice --- obtuse and mute To hautboy, sackbut, dulcimer, and flute; King David's lyre, that made the madness flee From Saul, had been but a jew's-harp to me: Theorbos, violins, French horns, guitars, Leave in my wounded ears inflicted scars; I hate those trills, and shakes, and sounds that float Upon the captive air; I know no note, Nor ever shall, whatever folks may say, Of the strange mysteries of Sol and Fa; I sit at oratorios like a fish, Incapable of sound, and only wish The thing was over. Yet do I admire, O tuneful daughter of a tuneful sire, Thy painful labours in a science, which To your deserts I pray may make you rich As much as you are loved, and add a grace To the most musical Novello race. Women lead men by the nose, some cynics say; You draw them by the ear—a delicater way.

Five months later the tender heart of Charles Lamb ceased to beat.

Later in the year, 1834, Clara Novello was engaged to sing at a musical festival held in Holy Trinity Church, Hull. This gave rise to an amusing Mr. William Dykes, a banker in the incident. town and father of the Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes, was one of the prime-movers in that important music-making. In a privately printed booklet entitled 'Personal Memories,' written by Miss Fanny Dykes, sister of Dr. Dykes, the amusing incident above referred to is thus related:

There were musical festivals in the fine old church, the Holy Trinity, in Hull. My father was on the committee, and took much interest in them. Clara Novello made her first appearance there.* Our father used sometimes to spend an evening with Mr. Novello, when in London. On one of these occasions he heard his daughter, Clara, a girl of about 15, sing, and persuaded the committee in Hull to engage her for the coming festival [in 1834]. I have often heard how angry some members of that committee were when they met the coach from London. A lady and a young girl alighted, and they asked the former when she would be ready for a rehearsal. 'It is my daughter who is to sing,' said the mother. My father was much blamed, until the lovely voice of Clara Novello told the committee that he had judged right in spite of the youth of the singer.

This, of course, is a little lacking in accuracy.

After singing at important festivals and concerts in England during the next three years, she gained further laurels on the Continent during a tour in 1837-38. She first appeared at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, on November 2, 1837, and again on January 1 and 8, 1838. On the last occasion, her own concert, Mendelssohn played Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in C minor, and so great was the applause after the concert-giver sang some national Irish and Scottish airs that she responded should proceed direct to Italy, and not visit Germany.

by singing 'God save the Queen.' Her performances found the greatest Mendelssohn, who wrote to Alfred Novello the following interesting letter in English, which we give literatim:

Leipzig, 18th Nov. 1837.

MY DEAR SIR.—It is now a fourtnight since your sister first appeared here in public, and directly after it I wanted to write to you & give you a full account of it & only to-day I have leisure enough to do it. Excuse it, but although it is late & I may think that you heard already from other sides of all the details of her great success here I cannot help writing you also on the subject, & before all I shout 'triumph' because you know that you were my enemyt & that my opinion prevailed only with great difficulty (tellers included) & that it comes now out how well I knew my countrymen, how well they appreciate what is really good & beautiful, & what a service to all the lovers of music has been done by your sister's coming over to this country. I do not know whether she thinks the same of my opinion now, I am sometimes afraid she must find the place so very small & dull, & miss her splendid philharmonic band & all those marchionesses, & duchesses and lady patronesses who look so beautifully aristocratically in your Concert-rooms, & of whom we have a great want. But if being really & heartily liked & loved by a public, & being looked on as a most distinguished & eminent talent must also convey a feeling of pleasure to those that are the object of it-I am sure that your sister cannot repent her resolution of accepting the invitation to this place, & must be glad to think of the delight she gave & the many friends she made in so short time & in a foreign country. Indeed I never heard such an unanimous expression of delight, as after her first Recitative, & it was a pleasure to see people at once agreeing & the difference of opinion (which must always prevail) consisting only in the more or less praise to be bestowed on her. It was capital that not one hand's applause received her when she first appeared to sing 'non più di fiore,' because the triumph after the Recitative was the greater; the room rung of applause, & after it there was such a noise of conversations, people expressing their delight to each other, that not a note of the whole ritornelle could be heard; then silence was again restored, & after the air, which she really sang better & with more expression than I ever heard from her, my good Leipsic public became like mad, & made a most tremendous noise. Since that moment she was the declared favourite of them, they are equally delighted with her clear & youthful voice & with the purity & good taste with which she sings everything. The Polacca of the Puritani was encored, which is a rare thing in our Concerts here, & I am quite sure the longer she stays & the more she is heard the more she will become a favourite; because she possesses just those two qualities of which the public is particularly fond here, purity of intonation & a thoroughbred musical feeling.

I must also add that I never heard her to greater advantage than at these two Concerts, & that I liked her singing infinitely better than ever I did before; whether it might be that the smaller room suits her better or perhaps the foreign air, or whether it is that I am partial to every thing in this country (which is also not unlikely), but I really think her much superior, to what I have heard her before. And therefore I am once more glad that I conquer'd you, my enemy. . . . And how is music going on in England? Or had you no time to think now of anything else than the Guildhall-puddings & pies & the 200 pineapples which the queen ate there, as a French paper has it. If you see Mr. Attwood will you tell him my best compliments & wishes, & that a very great cause of regret to me is my not having been able to meet him at my last stay in England.

And now the paper is over & consequently the letter also. Excuse its style, which is probably very German. My kindest regard to Mr. & Mrs. Clarke, & my best thanks for his kind letter & the papers he sent me by Mrs Novello. And now good bye & be as well & happy as I always wish you to be.

Very truly yours,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

The letter, written on the Bath paper favoured by Mendelssohn, is addressed: 'Alfred Novello, Esq., 69, Dean Street, Soho Square, London.'

Schumann, too, was hardly less enthusiastic than his friend Mendelssohn about the young English singer. He said*:

Clara Novello was the most interesting of these [artists]. She came to us from her friendly London circle, heralded as an artist of the first rank; and this weighed with us in Leipsic. For years I have heard nothing that has pleased me more than this voice, predominating over all other tones, yet breathing tender euphony, every tone as sharply defined as the tones of a keyed instrument; besides the noble performance, the simplicity, yet art, which seemed to desire prominence for the composer and his work only. She was most in her element with Handel, amid whose works she has grown up and become great. People asked each other, in astonishment, 'Is that Handel? Did Handel write so? Is it possible?' From such a performer the composer himself may learn; when we hear such a performance we again feel respect for the executive artists, who give us caricatures so often, because they leave school too soon; such art at once snaps asunder the stilts on which ordinary virtuosity strides and thinks it looks over our shoulders. Miss Clara Novello is not a Malibran, and not a Sontag, but she possesses her own highly original individuality, of which no one can deprive her.

From Leipzig Miss Novello proceeded to other German cities, including Berlin, and afterwards to St. Petersburg, always being favourably received. In 1839 she went to Milan, in order to study Italian opera under Micheroux. She first sang on the stage at Padua, July 6, 1841, in Rossini's 'Semiramide,' with great success, and afterwards made operatic appearances in Rome, Milan, Bologna, and other Italian cities, including Fermo. At the last-named place she met her future husband, Count Gigliucci. She returned to England in March, 1843, 'having performed the journey from Genoa in less than ten days,' so the Musical World records. She appeared at Drury Lane Theatre, under Macready's management, in an English version (by J. T. Serle, a son-in-law of Vincent Novello) of Pacini's 'Sappho,' on April 1, 1843. Her sister, Mrs. Serle, also appeared in the same opera, and the part of Hippias was impersonated by a young tenor named, on the play-bills, 'Mr. J. Reeves,' afterwards better known as Sims Reeves. 'Mr. J. Reeves's rich tenor voice was heard to great advantage, though in a small part,' is recorded by a critic. On May 5 of the same year, and at Drury Lane, a stage performance of Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' was given, Clara Novello being Galatea and Staudigl impersonating Polyphemus, while 'Mr. J. Reeves' was one of the Sicilian Shepherds. Soon afterwards Miss Novello sang at the concerts of the Sacred Harmonic Society and elsewhere with extraordinary success.

On November 22, 1843, the marriage took place at Paddington Parish Church of Giovanni Battista Gigliucci, Bachelor, Count, 'of the parish of St. George, Hanover Square,' son of Claudio Gigliucci, Count, and Clara Anastasia Novello, spinster, 'of the parish of Paddington,' daughter of 'Vincent Novello, Professor of music.' According to the certified copy of the marriage in the General Register Office at Somerset House, they register at the church was signed by Giovni. Batta Gigliucci and Clara Annastasia (sic) Novello, the witnesses being Vincent Novello and Em ma Aloysia Novello.

Madame Clara Novello (as she was professionally called) should resume the practice of her art. 1850 she reappeared in opera at Rome and Lisbon. On her return to England in July, 1851, she sang in a performance of the 'Messiah' at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Sacred Harmonic Society. The Illustrated London News, in a notice of that concert, said: 'On her entrance into the orchestra she was cordially greeted by the immense auditory and by her comrades in the orchestra, the patriarch Lindley affectionately receiving the daughter of his old friend, Vincent At the opening of the Crystal Palace, June 10, 1854, she created an extraordinary sensation by her magnificent singing. Sir George Grove more than once told the present writer of the electrifying effect of 'Clara Novello's high B flat in the National Anthem,' that 'unparagoned B flat,' as Mr. Davison called it. At the Handel Festivals of 1857 and 1859 she carried all before her in her interpretations of the master's music. In the following year (1860) she finally retired from all professional work, her last appearances being at a performance of the 'Messiah' given at the Crystal Palace, 1860, and in her benefit concert at St. James's Hall, November 21, 1860. Thenceforth she resided in Italy, spending the remaining years (over forty-seven) of her life at her residences at Fermo and Rome in alternation. Her voice was a high soprano, extending from C below the stave to D in alt, and it retained even in old age its purity of tone, brilliance and power. The greatest English soprano singer of her time, Clara Novello excelled in oratorio, her devotional nature finding its truest outlet in sacred music.

The picture of the eminent singer, forming one of our special supplements, is from a portrait painted by her brother, Edward Petre Novello, a gifted artist who died, at Hastings, January 4, 1836, at the early age of twenty-two. The photograph from which the reproduction has been made and now published for the first time, was taken by Mr. Augustus Littleton during a visit he paid to the Villa Novello, Genoa, where the portrait was then located.

We are authorized to state that Sir Hubert Parry, acting on medical advice, has obtained three months' leave of absence from the Royal College of Music, and that he has gone to Sicily for three months. Many will join with us in the fervent hope that the rest and change will completely restore to health the genial Director of the Royal College of Music. Sir Hubert has resigned the Professorship of Music in the University of Oxford, to which he was appointed in 1901 on the death of Sir John Stainer. Much regret is felt that he has relinquished a Chair which he has filled with such marked ability and earnestness of purpose.

Permanence in a work of art depends to a great extent on its being able to stand the test of frequent scrutiny without betraying serious flaws; and this is only achieved by considerable concentration of faculty and self-restraint.—Sir Hubert Parry in 'The Art of Music.'

MR. T. H. COLLINSON.

'In quietness and confidence shall be your strength.' To this precious promise may be joined the utterance of a great master of music, who said, 'No work begun in earnest and followed up by quiet perseverance can fail ultimately to command success.' Happy is the man whose character, influence, and life-work harmonize with the encouraging dicta above quoted: such an one is the highly-esteemed musician who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Thomas Henry Collinson was born on April 24, 1858, thus his entry into the world coincides with the birth of the Edinburgh Choral Union, of which he is the able conductor. He first saw the light at Alnwick, the county town of Northumberland, under the shadow of one of the most magnificent baronial castles in England. Thrice besieged during the Middle Ages, this stately structure formed a bulwark against the invasions of the Scots. Alnwick was formerly a fortified town; one of its gates and fragments of its walls still remain. Since the year 1310 Alnwick Castle has been the seat of the Percy family, and successive Dukes of Northumberland have shown a practical interest in the inhabitants of the little northern town. former Duke founded, in 1811, a school of which Mr. Thomas Collinson, father of the subject of this sketch, was for forty-seven years the headmaster.

Mr. Collinson, senr.—who, we regret to say, died, at Alnwick, on March 17, aged eighty-seven, while this article was being written—was a pioneer of modern educational methods. In addition to grounding his scholars in the three R's and in good English, he added to the curriculum courses of technical instruction — drawing, chemistry, zoology, horticulture, and so on. A thorough educationist, who took the greatest interest in developing the minds of the boys entrusted to his care, he constructed a salt-water aquarium and stocked it, while garden plots were provided for the young Alnwickers to work in; thus long ago did this provincial schoolmaster forestall practically carry out enlightened ideas of education. The father of Mr. Collinson, senr., was a remarkable mathematician. Cambridge dons were wont to make pilgrimages to Derbyshire, where he lived, in order to baffle him with some extraordinary problem, but he was always a match for the puzzles of those mathematical geniuses.

To return to Thomas Henry. Both his parents were artistically gifted. From his step-mother he received his first pianoforte lessons when he was seven years old. Mrs. Collinson imparted to her little son the secrets of that 'lovely touch' which in these days is becoming all too rare among pianists. His father sowed the seeds of that grit in his boy which makes men strong to labour and becomes a priceless heritage in after life. For instance, at half-past six o'clock in the morning Thomas had to begin practising his scales. Hard work and pegging-away perseverance were instilled into the boy and became part of his his revered father. At the age of nine he began to study the organ, and a year later he played his first service at St. Paul's Church, Alnwick, of 'As a deputy-organist during the Doctor's last which he became a chorister and a pupil of illness, and afterwards organist at St. Oswald's, I Mr. Charles E. Moore, then as now organist of the church, a post he has held for thirty-nine years. Mr. Moore, who is the editor of the County Gazette, has and contributed the following note upon his former pupil:

Collinson was a most diligent and painstaking pupil who always practised before breakfast. He was very soon able to deputise for me and to take full charge of the services when required to do so. In company with his two elder brothers he was a choirboy for some years, singing alto. He possessed a remarkably good voice, and was a good and correct reader.

He studied theory with Mr. J. Maude Crament, then residing at Alnwick, and derived much benefit from the organ lessons he received from William Alphonse Leggatt, a poetic-souled musician of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who, strangely enough, died, at Edinburgh, on the 10th of last month!

A great change in the youth's life occurred in 1871, when he was apprenticed for five years to the late Dr. Philip Armes, organist of Durham Cathedral. Within the walls of that stately fane he drank deeply from the well of pure English church music, and from his esteemed master he received valuable instruction and not a little inspiration for his future life-work as a cathedral organist. During his Durham period Mr. Collinson saw much of the Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes, then a minor canon of the cathedral and vicar of St. Oswald's Church in the city. Dr. Dykes was his own organist, and on his death, January 22, 1876, Mr. Collinson was appointed organist of In response to our request, St. Oswald's. Mr. Collinson has kindly furnished the following appreciation of Dr. Dykes, which is sure to be read with interest:

'My recollections of the saintly Dykes are altogether inspiring, tinted withal with the haze of the intervening years. A spare form, a serene countenance, a preoccupied mind — commonly called absence of mind—a voice not strong nor specially musical, will picture to the seeing eye in some sort the living presentment of the revered composer of "These are they" and of our best hymn-tunes. It seemed natural in the reverend Doctor to stumble over the order of the Lesson which he had just read, and say, "Here endeth the first, second," or the "second, first lesson"; but give him a choir poor and plain, and an organ of moderate dimensions—as in St. Oswald's Church, Durham—and then you might wonder at the virile grasp and imaginative power of his accompaniments. Bold they were, firm in touch, replete with colour, original in harmony; as, for instance, in his inimitable harmonizations of the Creed in monotone. And then his improvisations > had opportunity to learn something of his spirituality of temperament from his devoted parishioners, to whom he was a fatherly counsellor and sweet friend; and there were in certain manuscript books of the organ traces of his painstaking care in the ordering of the simple music, and also of his tentative and progressive settings of well-known hymns such as "Sun of my soul." The solemn obsequies of Dykes occupy a sacred niche in my memory—the humble parish choir, with myself at the organ, doing our best with simple hymn and psalm to voice the grief of a city. When will the world be enriched by the publication of his noble and touching Burial Service, still in manuscript at Durham?

> In 1877, aged nineteen, the subject of this sketch took the degree of Bachelor of Music at the University of Oxford. 'I am very glad to say that your admirable exercise [a setting of Psalm lxv.] has given very great satisfaction to myself and my coadjutors.' Thus wrote Ouseley, the Professor of Music. A year later (1878) Mr. Collinson, who is a fellow of the Royal College of Organists, was appointed organist and choirmaster of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, the duties of which office he still faithfully discharges. It was on September 24, 1878, when he, a young man in his twentyfirst year, held his first choir practice in the temporary Iron Church, the choir, then newlyformed, consisting of twelve boys and six men. At that time the beautiful permanent building (of which photographs are given on pages 227 and 228) was then nearly approaching completion.

> St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, owes its inception and realization to the munificence of two maiden ladies, the Misses Barbara and Mary Walker. At the death of the latter, in 1870, provision was made for the erection on the present site of a cathedral church to be called St. Mary. The Trustees of the Walker Estate (who were incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1877) were given special powers in connection with the erection of the cathedral, the cost of which had far exceeded the amount originally contemplated. As a concise description of the cathedral, no better account could be given than that which appeared in the Scottish Guardian of November 4, 1904, from a series of articles written by Mr. David D. Buchan, LL.B., by whose courtesy we are enabled to reprint it:

The Trustees invited competitive plans from six architectsthree in England and three in Scotland. Those of Sir Gilbert Scott were chosen, and were to cost £75,000; but owing to an extension of the nave, to difficulties in regard to the foundations, and to a rise in the price of labour, the ultimate cost of the building was about £110,000, exclusive of the The style of architecture is Early Pointed, and the plan is cruciform, giving a nave of six bays (exclusive of those formed by the western towers) and aisles, also a between the carols after a Christmastide Evensong! chancel of four bays with aisles. bays beyond the nave and choir, and at the intersection stands the great tower. The total length is 262 feet, while the height of the spire is 292 feet, and the height of the western towers when completed will be 220 feet. The foundation-stone was laid on May 21, 1874; the nave was opened on January 25, 1879; the capping of the spire took place on June 6, 1879; and finally the Cathedral was consecrated on October 30, 1879, in the presence of a large number of Bishops and clergy, the last name in the official list being that of Randall Davidson, then chaplain to another Scotsman, Archibald Crawford Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury, and himself now Primate of England.

During the quarter of a century various embellishments and additions have been made to the Cathedral. The great east and west windows have received stained glass. The organ by Willis, situated in the north transept, is now controlled by electro-pneumatic action from a new console in the chancel. Under a bequest by the late Mr. Hugh James Rollo, W.S. and Registrar of the Diocese, the Chapter House has been built. By other liberality there has been erected a Song School, the mural paintings of which, by Mrs. Traquair, are notable. The old house of Coates, after serving for a number of years as the organist's residence, has been adapted for the occupation of the Cathedral library, bequeathed by Dean Montgomery, while It was built in 1879, and in 1897 was adapted to the the choir school has recently been rebuilt and extended. By the gift of a living Churchman the south aisle of the chancel of the Cathedral was some years ago equipped as a side chapel for special services on week-days.

The mural paintings in the Song School referred to above, illustrate the Benedicite. This building, one admirably adapted for sound, was built at a cost of $\pounds_{2,000}$ and opened in November, 1885. For that occasion Mr. Collinson composed an eightpart anthem, 'Not unto us, O Lord.' The choir school is a separate building. Here the thirty boys -all of whom live at home—are educated. By dividing the chorister choir into three divisions (A, B, and C) the Sunday duty (three services) is lightened, two sections only in turn singing at the evening service. There are fourteen regular lay-clerks at the Sunday services, four of whom sing at the daily Evensong. For the evening services on Sundays, and when an augmented choir is required, about twenty voluntary lay-clerks are available.

The organ, a four-manual instrument by Father Willis, stands in the north transept of the cathedral.

The Hope-Jones electric system of mechanism. movable console stands at the north-east pillar of the central tower. In addition to fully maintaining all the best traditions of English cathedral music, Mr. Collinson has organized and successfully carried out special musical services at St. Mary's Cathedral. On those occasions the following works, mostly with orchestral accompaniment, have been performed:

Bach's St. Matthew Passion and Christmas Oratorio; Handel's Messiah and Dettingen Te Deum; Haydn's Passion; Graun's Passion; Beethoven's Mount of Olives; Mendelssohn's Elijah, St. Paul, and Hymn of Praise; Brahms's Requiem; and Gounod's Redemption.

His duties in connection with this office are to play the organ in the McEwan Hall at Graduations and other University functions held in that gorgeous building. (See the illustration on the opposite page.)

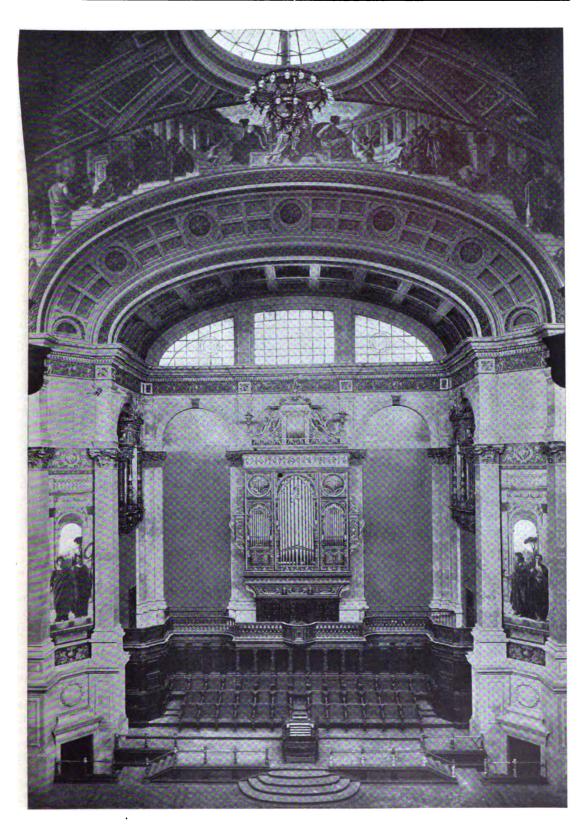

An interesting non-musical connection with the University of Edinburgh, especially the medical section, is related in The Student of March 2, 1899, the magazine of the Students' Representative Council at the University. After stating that from his earliest years sat on the five-barred gate of Music, poring over the pages of dots and dashes whereby the master minds have given harmony and melody to the world,' the article went on to say:

In 1890 experiments were conducted by the late Professor Rutherford and Dr. Berry Haycraft on muscle contraction and heart beats, their substance being communicated by the latter gentleman to the Royal Society of Edinburgh. T. H. Collinson was invited to assist at these experiments by contributing from his knowledge of absolute musical pitch the data needed to show the flow of nervous force during muscle contraction, this flow manifesting itself by the period of its vibrations. The well-known fact, established by Helmholtz, of the heart beating in minor thirds, was independently affirmed by T. H. Collinson from his own observation. A somewhat curious sequel followed Mr. Collinson's voluntary assistance to physiological research. Several months after the reading of the paper, the annual record of the Royal Society's doings reached the alert ears of the Anti-Vivisection Society in Violent articles were written in London. the Society's papers, and Mr. Collinson was threatened with criminal prosecution, which was only stopped by the authorities here showing that the vivisections were carried out (painlessly) by the licensed operators, Mr. Collinson merely attending as an expert Artistic restraint in his therewith, covering a period of a quarter of a accompaniments, a wise eclecticism in the choice century, is referred to in the article on the of music, and a reverent discharge of the duties of Jubilee of that organization in the present issue his sacred office are other attributes that can (page 233). With that rare acumen which characterized every action of the late Queen, she sent within an hour of her visit a message from Holyrood 'commanding' that 'Rule, Britannia' was to be included in the programme. Only a dozen copies of the music were available in the Exhibition, and all the shops were closed in honour of the Queen's visit, but Mr. Collinson obtained a police pass for a cab to and from his house to procure his cyclostyle. During the drive he harmonized the refrain and then printed off a few copies at the Exhibition, where the official printers set up and struck off copies of the words. sopranos singing from the dozen copies of Arne's and the horn. patriotic air.

Since 1900 Mr. Collinson has conducted the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society, an organization instituted in 1872 under the direction of the late Mr. Carl D. Hamilton. Society's library includes forty-eight The symphonies and ninety overtures, in addition to a large number of other works which have been performed by the orchestra. No difficulty is experienced in obtaining talented amateurs for playing the solo parts in concertos for pianoforte, violin, or violoncello. Five of Beethoven's symphonies have been performed, had due and modern compositions have recognition in such works as the 'Meistersinger' overture and Dvorák's 'New World' symphony. It is the bare truth to say that the subject of this biographical sketch has exercised a powerful influence for good on the art of music in Edinburgh during his thirty years' residence in the Scottish capital. One of the most modest and genial of men, his courtesy of demeanour and charm of manner have secured him the respect and esteem—even the affection—of all with whom he comes in contact, whether socially or officially. Among British musicians who are serving their generation wisely and well, and who are carrying on their work quietly and earnestly in the true artistic spirit, a high place must be accorded to Thomas Henry Collinson.

A new organization has recently been formed under the title of 'The Musical League.' According to the official announcement of its formation, the scope of the Musical League is certainly comprehensive. Its objects are:

- 1. To foster the cause of music in England, and to promote the development of musical life and culture throughout the country:
 - (a) By holding an annual Festival of two or three days' duration, at which the works performed shall consist partly of new compositions, both English and foreign, partly of older works of musical interest which, under present conditions, cannot be heard as frequently as their merits entitle them to be. The Festival will be held each year in a different town.

(b) By making use at the Festival, as far as possible, of the existing musical organizations of each district and of the services of local musicians.

- (c) By affording opportunities for composers, executive artists and amateurs to exchange ideas upon questions of interest to musicians.
- (d) By establishing, as soon as possible, a Journal that shall be the official organ of the League.
- 2. To look after the general interests of musicians:
 - (a) By watching any proposed legislation that may affect them.
 - (b) By taking steps, when necessary, to promote or to prevent such legislation.
 - (c) By protecting the rights of composers in their agreements with publishers and with concert societies or opera houses.

3. To assist necessitous musicians of merit in cases of sickness or undeserved misfortune.

The following gentlemen constitute the first committee: Sir Edward Elgar (President), Mr. Frederick Delius (Vice-President), Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. Adolph Brodsky, Dr. W. G. McNaught, Messrs. Henry J. Wood, Granville Bantock, Philip L. Agnew, Percy Pitt, Norman O'Neill and Harry Evans. The Hon. Treasurer is Mr. J. D. Johnston, 14, Chapel Street, Liverpool; and Mr. C. Copeley Harding, 32, Waterloo Street, Birmingham, is the Hon. Secretary.

A series of very elaborate rules has been drawn up, some of which appear to be somewhat unnecessary, especially those relating to the 'expulsion' of members, while the constant reiteration of the word 'must' has rather a forbidding effect. Considering some of the names of those forming the executive, Rule 25 seems to be somewhat arbitrary. It reads:

No Member of the Committee or of the Music Selection Sub-Committee shall be eligible to have any of his works performed at a Festival of the League during his term of office.

But doubtless this and all the other features of the constitution of this new organization have been carefully considered by those responsible for its initiation. The practical outcome of The Musical League will be awaited with much interest: in the meantime we wish it all success.

As an interesting sequel to the article on 'Cherubini in England,' which appeared in our March issue, we give a letter written by Cherubini to Ingres, the artist who painted the portrait of the composer which we reproduced. The original letter is in the collection of Mr. Edward Speyer, who has kindly allowed its publication in these columns:

Paris, ce 24 décembre, 1835.

Cher ami et illustre confrère,

Il y a bien longtemps que je n'aie eu le plaisir de m'entretenir avec vous, que j'aime de tout mon cœur, et que je révère comme homme de bien et comme grand artiste. J'ai voulu plusieurs fois vous écrire, mais il m'est survenu quelque empechement, toujours indésirable, qui m'en a empeché malgré moi. J'avis de vos nouvelles indirectes, par des lettres que vous adréssez de tems en tems à l'académie; mais elles ne contenaient pas mon désir, qui aurait voulu les avoir par vous particulièrement, en les provoquant par une lettre de moi qui vous aurait donné des miennes: Pardonnez donc moi, mon très digne ami, d'avoir tant tardé à vous écrire.

J'imagine que vous vous êtes toujours bien porté, ainsi que la chère et aimable Madame Ingres, à laquelle je vous prie de présenter mes hommages respectueux. Quant à ma santé elle est toujours bonne; mais je suis malgré moi dominé par un fond de tristesse, sans savoir à quoi en attribuer la véritable cause; tout m'ennuie, mais je n'en dis rien à personne, surtout à ma femme, que je crains d'inquieter, dont la santé n'est pas dans un état exempt de souffrances. Ce qui influe à me rendre morose est peut-être mon âge, qui affaiblit mes organes et les ressorts de la vie; au demeurant je ne vaux plus grand chose car mes compositions s'en ressentent; il est tems que je ferme boutique. Quant à vous, cher ami, vous êtes encore jeune, et en état de donner des productions dignes de votre beau talent. Vous occupez vous de ma triste figure, que vous avez commencée à embellir par vos pinceaux? Conservezvous toujours le projet de faire une course à Paris, ainsi que vous me l'aviez dit avant de partir pour Rome, après deux ans de votre Directoriat, quel plaisir ce serait pour moi, et pour tous vos amis si un tel projet avait son effet? Un de vos pensionnaires, le jeune Edward, vient d'obtenir un beau succes pour une cantate qu'il a composé à la mémoire de Bellini. On dit que vous lui avez témoigné beaucoup d'intérêt; cela doit l'encourager car c'est un honneur pour lui que d'avoir reçu particulièrement votre suffrage.

Adieu, mon digne ami; veuillez ne jamais oublier votre admirateur, et l'attachement sincère et inaltèrable qu'il vous a voué pour la vie.

Votre devoué, L. CHERUBINI.

The University of Cambridge has done a gracious act in conferring upon Mr. Paul David the new degree of Master of Music, honoris causa. This is the first time that the degree has been conferred, and no worthier recipient could be found for this initial distinction than the much-esteemed music-master of Uppingham School. In presenting Mr. David to the Vice-Chancellor, on March 7, the Public Orator, Dr. Sandys, referred to the fact that Ferdinand David, the father of the recipient of the degree, had been associated with Mendelssohn in Leipzig, and that he had been among the teachers of two musicians recently deceased, August Wilhelmj and Joseph Joachim. Joachim had frequently visited Uppingham for the sake of his friend, the son of his former master, and on the last occasion had dedicated to music the room in the War-Memorial building, which had been set apart in recognition of his friend's forty years of invaluable service to the School. The walls of that room were adorned with a motto from Seneca, Res severa verum gaudium," a motto suggesting the delight with which the whole School had been inspired by Mr. David's constant endeavour to maintain a taste for the highest types of classical music. The influence of music in education had been fully recognized by the ancients; in the enthusiastic and successful teaching of that art in the schools of the present day, no one had for a greater number of years set a more auspicious example than Mr. David, the admirable coadjutor of two successive Headmasters of Uppingham. At the dedication of the David Concert Room at Uppingham above referred to—May 23, 1905- Joachim played the Beethoven Concerto for the last time in his life. We gave an illustrated account of Uppingham School in our issue of July, 1906.

The following is the full text of the Public Orator's speech:

Herr Ernst Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, of Berlin, a nephew of the composer, has offered to the Emperor William a villa which he owns in the neighbourhood of Rome, on condition that it shall be used as a convalescent home for musicians who visit the Eternal City. The Kaiser has not only gratefully accepted the gift, but has made known his intention of building an annexe where painters and sculptors might similarly be received and allowed all freedom to work.

The Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto is a choral organization whose creation, development and success can largely be placed to the credit of its founder and conductor, Mr. A. S. Vogt. Started in 1894, the choir was reorganized—after a suspension of active work between 1897 and 1900—on its present basis, in which artistic ideals occupy a very important place. Beginning with a modest single concert in Toronto, it has steadily widened its field of operations by giving concerts in Buffalo and New York. Its annual concerts in Toronto are in many respects as comprehensive as a musical festival, the works performed covering almost the entire range of choral music in addition to orchestral compositions of the various schools. For instance, last season, with the co-operation of the Theodore Thomas Orchestra (of Chicago), the Mendelssohn Choir performed portions of Bach's B minor Mass, Brahms's Requiem, Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and César Franck's '150th Psalm,' in addition to unaccompanied compositions by Lotti, Palestrina, Cornelius and others. The concerts are given in the Massey Hall, Toronto, which holds 3,500 people, and they are so attractive that the hall is completely sold out for each concert. Next season Elgar's 'Caractacus' is to be performed, and there is a whispered report that Mr. Vogt has an idea of bringing his Toronto choristers to England. If this idea be carried out, they may be sure of a very hearty welcome by lovers of choral music in the Mother Country.

The good work carried on by Mr. Dan Godfrey at Bournemouth for so many years in connection with the Municipal Symphony Orchestra of that favoured watering-place, shows no signs of abatement in interest or enterprise. Highly commendable is the practical encouragement which Mr. Godfrey gives to British composers in the production and performance of their works. An instance of this occurred at the twentythird concert of the thirteenth season, given on March 12, when the greater part of the programme was devoted to compositions by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. The selection consisted of the 'Astarte' prelude, the 'Pibroch' suite for violin (soloist, Mr. Rowsby Woof), and the Prelude to and Ballet-music from 'Colomba.' These were all admirably played under the baton of Sir Alexander, who was very cordially received. It was a pretty compliment to the nationality of the guest of the afternoon to conclude this interesting music-making with a per-formance of Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony (conducted by Mr. Dan Godfrey), a work which germinated among the ruins of the chapel at Holyrood during the composer's visit to Edinburgh, that beautiful city which can claim Sir Alexander Mackenzie as one of its most distinguished sons.

Dr. Joseph C. Bridge, M.A., F.S.A., organist of Chester Cathedral, has been appointed Professor of Music in the University of Durham, in succession to the late Dr. Armes. Professor Bridge is to be warmly congratulated upon being elected to an office the duties of which he is so well qualified to discharge.

Count Leo Tolstoy is said to be very fond of classical music, especially that of Haydn and Mozart. On being asked why he had a preference for classical music he replied that it had a tranquillising influence upon his nerves, whereas the aim of contemporary music was excitement. Others, who are neither octogenarians nor Russians, are disposed to agree with Count Tolstoy in his musical tastes.

Eminently Davisonic are M. Debussy's comments on Wagner's 'Ring' as quoted in Mrs. Franz Liebich's monograph of the composer reviewed on page 240. In 1903 M. Debussy, in his capacity of music critic of the Paris periodical Gil Blas, visited London to write upon the performances of the celebrated Bayreuth Tetralogy. He thus records his impressions of those representations at Covent Garden:

It is difficult for anyone who has not had the same experience to picture to themselves the condition of a man's mind, even the most normal, after attending the Tetralogy for four consecutive evenings. A quadrille of leit-motifs dances in one's brain, in which Siegfried's theme and Wotan's lance, are vis-à-vis, while the malediction motif cuts some weird figures. It is more than an obsession, it is a complete possession. One loses one's identity, and becomes transformed into a walking leit-motif moving in a tetralogical It seems as if for the future our habitual code of civility will not prevent us from hailing our friends with Valkyrie exclamations! 'A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house.' These words cannot be applied to Dr. Henry John Edwards, for it is proposed to confer upon him the distinction of Honorary Freedom of the Borough of Barnstaple, in which town he was born and where he has worthily upheld the cause of music for many years. honour is the more significant as it is seldom conferred, the latest instance in recent years being Sir F. Carruthers Gould, the eminent caricaturist, who is also a native of Barnstaple. The ceremony of conferring the Freedom and the presentation of a casket containing the necessary document is to take place on April 22. On that day two concerts will be given by the Barnstaple Musical Festival Society, when the oratorio 'The risen Lord,' composed by Dr. Edwards, the conductor of the Society, and Sullivan's Golden Legend, will be performed. Dr. Edwards is to be J. Hargitt.—The weekly meetings for the practice of Oratorios and other large works of Handel, Beethoven, the hands of his fellow-townsmen.

The musical instrument section of the Stuttgart Museum has just been enriched by three most interesting instruments. The first is an artistically ornamented spinet of the 16th century, bearing the signature 'Francesco Poggio, Rome.' The second, signature 'Francesco Poggio, Rome.' The second, still more richly ornamented, is a cimbelone, with signature, 'Giovanni Ferrini, Florence,' while the third is a harpsichord of one manual, and two strings to each note.

It is proposed to present Dr. W. H. Cummings with an address, accompanied by a token of personal esteem, in connection with the recent libel action which resulted in a verdict in his favour. A committee has been formed to carry out this intention, of which Sir Frederick Bridge is the chairman, and Dr. J. E. Borland, Kelton, Bromley Road, Catford; Mr. F. A provincial newspaper records the following remarkable occurrence:

Mr. Harry Evans of Liverpool gave an address on the future of music in Wales at the opening of the twenty-second session of the burglar who had stolen twenty gold watches.

One may assume that Mr. Harry Evans was present at an operation upon a time-serving gentleman whose twenty-second session—whatever part of a burglar's anatomy that may be—contained a full score of time-recording requisites. But why Mr. Harry Evans should choose that particular occasion for the delivery of 'an address on the future of music in Wales' is not quite clear, unless it is that the æsthetics of the art have an affinity for the. anæsthetics of the operating room. May not the burglar have partaken of too much printer's pie?

In a notice of a performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' somewhere up north, we read that :

It was a wise innovation to entrust the orchestral music to strings only, a much better balance being obtained; and words of too high praise cannot be said of Mr. —— for the manner in which he filled in the other parts at the organ. His tone-colour proved him to be a veritable master of stopping.

JUBILEE OF THE EDINBURGH CHORAL UNION.

'Great events from little causes rise' is distinctly true of the Edinburgh Choral Union, which this year is celebrating its Jubilee. Moreover, the year of jubilation finds this excellent organization in the full vigour of healthy life and unbounded enthusiasm for the cause of choral music North of the Tweed. It was a happy thought, justified by the importance of the Society, to issue a history of the fifty years of its existence. This has been compiled by Mr. James Waddell, and published in an attractive volume of 320

The Edinburgh Choral Union owes its inception to Mr. Charles J. Hargitt, now living in retirement at Tunbridge Wells. On November 28, 1858, an Tunbridge Wells. On November 28, 1858, an advertisement appeared in the North British Advertiser in the following terms:

EDINBURGH CHORAL UNION-Conductor, Mr. Charles Haydn, Mendelssohn, etc., will take place in Wood & Co.'s Saloon, Waterloo Place, every Thursday evening, commencing at half-past eight o'clock. The preliminary meeting for the enrolment of members will take place in the above Hall on Thursday, the 25th inst., at half-past eight o'clock.

The Society did not make any public appearance till January 3, 1860, when they sang in a performance of Bennett's 'May Queen,' at one of four concerts organized by Mr. George Wood, of Messrs. Wood & Co. Curiously enough, the first concert given by the Choral Union 'on its own responsibility' was not at Edinburgh, but at Dalkeith. It took place on April 4, 1860, an entry in the Minute Book stating that:

The concert commenced at δ p.m. precisely and was brought to a conclusion about ten. The programme consisted of glees, madrigals, Scotch and English part-songs, national songs and ballads, besides the programme of the Pipers of the 78th Regiment, who played a variety of national airs, including the celebrated Lucknow March. The audience was highly respectable and pretty numerous, and evinced their appreciation of the concert by repeated and enthusiastic encores. Next day the Caledonian Mercury gave an extremely flattering notice of the concert, contributed by a Dalkeith correspondent.

In a foot-note to this extract Mr. Waddell says: 'Although every effort has been made, no file of the Caledonian Mercury for 1860 can be found.' There is, however, a complete copy for 1860 of that Edinburgh newspaper in the British Museum. From this we have extracted the 'flattering notice' above referred to, in amplification of the 'History.' Here it is!

EDINBURGH CHORAL UNION.—The above Association gave a concert in Dalkeith Corn Exchange on Monday evening last, assisted by Miss Sophia Esten. The pipers of the 78th Regiment were also present, and diversified the entertainment with several of their heart-stirring pibrochs, Scotch reels, &c. The programme was of a very recherché character, and we were sorry that the lieges of Dalkeith did not muster in greater numbers to appreciate it. Miss Esten's 'Ah che Assorta' and 'Hearts and homes' were rendered with taste and feeling. She is a pleasing soprano,

The first important event in the history of the Society was their taking part in the performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' given under the auspices of Mr. Mitchell, of Bond Street (London), on November 22, 1861, the soloists being Jenny Lind, Sims Reeves, and Beletti. On that occasion Mr. Hargitt gracefully placed the baton in the hands of Mr. Otto Goldschmidt doubtless as a compliment to that gentleman's illustrious wife. 'The 'Creation' was again performed on November 13, 1866, on which occasion the leader of the second violins was one A. C. Mackenzie. At a performance of the 'Messiah,' later in the year, Sir Charles Santley made 'his first appearance in oratorio in Scotland.' The Society introduced Costa's 'Naaman' into Scotland on February 26, 1868, when the fiddlers in the orchestra included 'Mr. A. C. Mackenzie' and 'Mr. Niecks,' both these gentlemen being now known to fame in other than violinistic capacities: the solo vocalists on that occasion, forty years ago, included Messrs. W. H. Cummings and Santley. In 1878 a new feature was introduced into the concerts by 'the

and shows a decided capacity for the higher walks of music. 'Let me like a soldier fall' was sung by Mr. H. Howard in a masterly manner, and Mr. Dunbar's rendering of the Volunteers' song, 'Riflemen, form,' was a decided hit, and was honoured with an encore. The part-songs, on the whole, were ably sustained by the full strength of the Union, and went off with a steadiness and precision much to the credit of their able leader, Mr. C. J. Hargitt. We cannot omit mentioning the trio, 'Up, quit thy bower,' sustained by Miss Œsten, Mr. Dunbar and Mr. H. Howard, who did it great justice. It is about one of the best of Richard's compositions we have heard for some time. We would suggest to the Choral Union on their again visiting Dalkeith, to preserve a portion of the hall for the working classes at a reduced figure. The prices of admission, we believe, kept many away who would have been present.—

appearance of the Edinburgh Choral Union Part-Song Choir, conducted by Mr. A. C. Mackenzie. The choir was composed partly of members of the Society and partly of outside singers.' The name of Mr. T. H. Collinson, the present able conductor of the Society, first appears in 1882 in the capacity of accompanist at a performance of the 'Creation.' In the following year, February 15, 1883, he appeared as solo pianist in Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, this concert being given to commemorate the semi-jubilee of the foundation of the Choral Union. A few months afterwards the office-bearers did a good thing in appointing Mr. Collinson conductor of the Society, a post which he continues to hold with distinction.

Opportunity may now be taken of referring to some of the humorous incidents contained in Mr. Waddell's narrative. At the end of the season of 1864 the Society was indebted to the treasurer in the sum of eightpence! A criticism of one of the concerts stated that 'it is creditable that there should have been so little to blame.' At a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, thirty-eight years ago, owing to the absence of two solo singers 'the solo parts were played on the organ'! And yet a critic said that the whole performance of the intensely difficult ninth Symphony went without perceptible failure or flaw, and that it reflected credit on all concerned! He ought to have added 'including the organist.' Owing to the absence, at the eleventh hour, of the tenor soloist at a performance of 'Elijah,' Miss Simpson came to the rescue by singing 'Then shall the righteous' with great power and feeling.

The conductors of the Edinburgh Choral Union previous to Mr. Collinson have been Messrs. C. J. Hargitt, 1858-62; James Shaw (afterwards organist of Hampstead Parish Church), 1862-64; William Howard, 1864-66; and Adam Hamilton, 1866-83. For twenty years—1868 to 1887—orchestral concerts were given in addition to the choral music-makings, the conductors being Adam Hamilton, Hans von Bülow, Julius Tausch, and August Manns. At these concerts the following works were heard for the first time in Scotland:

Symphony No. 3, in F; Academic and Tragic overtures (Brahms); Symphony No. 2, in D minor (Dvorák); Ballad La Belle Dame sans merci' and second Rhapsodie on Scottish melodies (A. C. Mackenzie); the Scandinavian and Welsh symphonies (Cowen); Grieg's Pianoforte concerto, and Rubinstein's (in D minor); also the Tannhäuser overture, on December 9, 1868.

While on the subject of the orchestra a quotation may be made from chapter v. of Mr. Waddell's 'History,' which covers the period 1887 to 1908. He says:

At first the concerts were given on a very humble scale. They improved gradually, however, as regards both the artistes engaged and the accompaniments. At the earlier concerts of this period, the organ and pianoforte alone accompanied the voices. These instruments were in time succeeded by a small string orchestra, and latterly by an Reception at the City Chambers, and on February 28 orchestra of professionals supplemented by amateurs. amateur instrumentalists have been of the very greatest assistance to the Society, not only in playing at the concerts but, in many cases, in being present at the preliminary rehearsals. Their playing has always been of a high order, and now compares favourably with that of many professional players in the seventh and eighth decades of the last century.

An important and valuable adjunct to the Society has been, and still is, the elementary and advanced classes which have been held since the year 1864. As the 'History' says:

As an educational force in the cause of music their importance cannot be over-estimated, and in addition they have proved a very valuable recruiting-ground for the Society, as at the end of every season the members of the classes are given the opportunity, upon passing the necessary examination, of becoming members of the Society.

Since the year 1882, Mr. James Dowie, an excellent amateur musician, has had charge of these classes, the members of which give an annual concert on their own account.

At the end of the volume is a carefully-compiled catalogue of all the works, choral and instrumental, performed by the Society during its existence, arranged under the names of composers in alpha-betical order. Some of the more important instrumental pieces performed for the first time in Scotland have already been mentioned. The choral works first heard North of the Tweed under the auspices of the Society are:

Bach - - B minor Mass. Mackenzie lason. Cotter's Saturday Beethoven Choral Fantasia. Dvorák -Stabat Mater. Night. Elgar - -Caractacus. Parry -Judith. Dream of oces Clamantium. Gerontius. Sullivan - Prodigal Son. Redemption. Gounod -

A Jubilee Concert was given at the Music Hall, George Street, on March 9, when the programme consisted of Weber's Jubilee overture, Schubert's Song of Miriam, and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Louisa Currie (a local singer and the possessor of a pleasing voice), and Mr. Charles Saunders. The overture and the accompaniments were played in a most finished manner by the Hallé Orchestra. Good attack and pure tone characterized the singing of the choir, and the concert gave evident pleasure to an audience that completely filled the building. The choir numbered 330 voices, distributed thus: Sopranos, 88; contraltos and counter-tenors (3), 83; tenors, 73; basses, 86. Mr. Collinson conducted with all due alertness and with a thorough knowledge of the and Mr. Bradley in acknowledgment of the valuable and efficient services these gentlemen have rendered the Society during the past twenty-five years, both having held their respective offices of conductor and organist concurrently during that period.

Reference to this gratifying part of the Jubilee proceedings is made in the biographical sketch of Mr. Collinson on p. 228. A few words must here be said about the estimable organist of the Society, Mr. Charles Bradley.

A Yorkshireman-born at Wakefield, October 20, 1846—Mr. Bradley was an organ pupil of Mr. R. S. Burton, organist of Leeds Parish Church; he studied harmony under Dr. Armes and Mr. F. W. Davenport. which he subsequently became organist, and also of St. Mary's and St. John's Churches in that city. In 1868 he removed to Middlesbrough, holding church appointments there and in the neighbourhood. He was appointed organist of St. George's Parish Church, Edinburgh, in 1882, the Abbey Parish Church in 1886, and a year later to South Leith Parish Church, a post which he still occupies.

In conclusion, the Edinburgh Choral Union has reason to be proud of its office-bearers, who manage its business affairs so wisely and well. In this connection the name of the president, Mr. J. S. P. Bisset, and that of the indefatigable secretary, Mr. J. W. Smith, deserve more than honourable mention.

LETTERS OF A BACHIST:

SAMUEL WESLEY.

The extent of the propagating zeal of Samuel Wesley in the cause of Bach's music will never be known. There are many of Wesley's letters extant and what wonderful letters they are !--which bear eloquent and amusing testimony to his extraordinary enthusiasm for 'THE MAN,' as he called the great Cantor. To these can be added four more communications, hitherto unpublished, which have recently been acquired by Mr. Arthur F. Hill, by whose kind permission we are enabled to print them. This quartet of letters is invested with additional interest in that they were addressed to Bridgetower, the mulatto violinist, who is so well known in connection with Beethoven and the 'Kreutzer' Sonata.

The first letter was written just at the time that Wesley and Horn were preparing Part I. of their edition of Bach's 'Wohltemperirte Klavier'—the first English edition of that immortal work*:

Thursday, 29 March [1810 on postmark].

DEAR SIR,-I much regret having been unable to fix a moment hitherto for our meeting. I now offer you a tempting evening, no other than next Sunday, when a few of the orthodox harmonists will meet at Mr. Stephenson's, Queen Square, N. 29 (I think) for the purpose of celebrating the natal day of Sebastian Bach. I am commissioned to invite all thorough enthusiasts in such a cause to be present, among whom I think I am not much mistaken in enumerating you.

> Pray come, & believe me, with much regard, Yours faithfully

S. WESLEY.

To Mr. Bridgetower,

N. 2 (or 3) John Street, St. James's Square, [redirected to] 51 Charing Cross.

The Mr. Stephenson referred to in the above letter was the banker who financed the English translation of Forkel's 'Life of Bach,' published in 1820, and himself a Bachist.

Of special interest is the following letter, as it refers to a performance on the organ by Wesley of the whole of the '48':

Tottenham Court, New Road,

Friday, 4th of Septr. [1812 on postmark].

DEAR SIR,—I have appointed a few friends to meet me tomorrow morns at 11 o'clock in Francis Street, Tottenham Court Road (very near Clementi's manufactory) at Davis's, the organ builder, whose name is on the door and who has built an excellent instrument for a church at Surinam in the West Indies.

Mr. Logier (a German professor, and the principal music seller in Dublin) is very desirous of hearing the whole of the Preludes and Fugues, and I have promised to attempt them all through, altho' really I have lately had so little opportunity of playing, that I do not expect to do them much justice. I shall, however, be glad of the company of so candid a hearer as yourself, who I know will make due allowance for the want of practice.

I am always, Dear Sir, Yours most truly

S. WESLEY.

To Mr. Bridgtower
No. 9, Little Ryder Street,
Piccadilly.

The 'Mr. Logier' above referred to was Johann Bernard Logier (1780-1846), the inventor of the chiroplast, an apparatus designed to facilitate the acquirement of a correct position of the hands on the pianoforte, patented in 1814.

The next letter is addressed to Bridgetower at No. 20, Chapel Street, Grosvenor Place; it is written from Gower Place, Euston Road, and dated July 1, [1814 on postmark]:

MY DEAR SIR,—Being now a comparatively disengaged animal to what I was when the performance of Linley's and Russell's musick was in preparation (in both of which affairs I had a great deal of trouble), I beg leave to inform you that I shall be happy to know when and where I am to make good my promise to my brother of hearing you execute the exquisite solos of Bach. If you will name any evening within a week hence, I (for myself) will make it convenient to attend your appointment, and upon obtaining your answer, will immediately acquaint my brother.

Novello sorely regretted his loss, originating in an idle mistake of mine in the former instance, but I trust you will suffer him to be of the party, as you cannot have an auditor more capable of highly relishing the exertion of your uncommon talent upon the most expressive of all musical instruments.

> Believe me, my dear sir, with unfeigned regard, Most truly yours S. Wesley.

Somewhat enigmatical is the last of the four letters addressed to Bridgetower, still at No. 20, Chapel Street, Grosvenor Place:

Gower Street, Euston Square,

Saturday, November 11 [1815 on postmark]. DEAR SIR,—Mr. Ball, of Duke Street, informed me that you have a new great Gun in the musical way, to whom you wish me to be introduced, and I am inclined to think from the description of his stile of performance, that it is the gentleman whom Clementi proposed lately to become an Associate of the Philharmonists this season and which who is soon as convenient, when the meeting can be managed, and I will endeavour to arrange my odds and ends accordingly.

(By the way) I directed a letter to Chapel Street some months ago which I conclude never reached you. In it I expressed a solicitude concerning my MS. copy of Bach's violin solos, which I hope that I lent you, because in that case I know them to be safe: I have searched diligently for them, but hitherto without success.

Believe me, Dear Sir,

Very truly yours,

S. WESLEY.

Church and Organ Music.

THE BENEDICITE.

The Benedicite has now become so distinctly a Lenten canticle at Morning Prayer, that a few words upon its origin and musical settings may not prove unacceptable. In regard to its history we cannot do better than quote from Canon Daniel, who says. *

better than quote from Canon Daniel, who says: * 'This canticle is so called from the opening words of the Latin version, "Benedicite, omnia Opera." It is also called "The Song of the Three Holy Children," because, according to the Septuagint interpolation between verses 23 and 24 of Dan. iii., it was sung by the Jewish youths, Ananias, Azarias, and Misael (Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego), in the burning furnace into which they were cast by King Nebuchad-The Septuagint represents Azarias as confessing the sins of his nation, and praying for Divine deliverance, and the angel of the Lord thereupon smiting "the flame of the fire out of the oven, so that the fire touched them not at all, nor troubled them." "Then the three, as out of one mouth, praised, glorified, and blessed God in the furnace, saying," etc. Then follows a grand hymn of thanksgiving, of which the Benedicite is only a part. There can be little doubt that the Benedicite, which is only a paraphrase of the 148th Psalm, was the composition of an Alexandrine Jew. It was included by the Jews among "The Hymns of our Fathers," and at a very early period adopted by the Christian Church, though not uniformly, as canonical. Rufinus, who lived in the fourth century, defends it against the doubts cast on its authority by St. Jerome, and says that it had been used long before his time in the Church of Toledo.'

In the unreformed Offices of the English Church the Benedicite was sup? Chi Sur days and on festivals at lauds; indeed, it was one of the psalms with which lauds began. Cranmer retained it as a canticle. In the first Prayer-Book of King Edward VI., issued in 1549, the rubric directs that 'After the fyrste Lesson shall folowe Te deum laudamus in Englishe, dayly throughout the yeare, excepte in Lente, all the wiche tyme in the place of Te deum shalbe used, Benedicite omnia opera Domini Domino in Englyshe.' This part of the rubric was cancelled in the second Prayer-Book (1552), and now there is no definite direction when this alternative canticle to the Te deum should or should not be used. Before proceeding further it should be mentioned that in the Scottish Booke of Common Prayer'—printed at Edinburgh in 1637 and known as Archbishop Laud's Prayer-Book—the alternative Canticle to the Te Deum is Psalm xxiii.

The original doxology to the Benedicite was in the following words, which more naturally sum up the grand purport of the canticle:

O let us bless the Father, and the Son, with the Holy Ghost: let us praise Him and magnify Him for ever. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, in the firmament of heaven; praiseworthy and glorious, and magnified for ever.

This doxology was displaced in 1549 in favour of the more familiar Gloria Patri.

Authorities seem to differ as to the natural divisions of the Benedicite. Canon Daniel, however, suggests four groups of invocations:

- (a) Those addressed to the angels, the heavens, and the heavenly bodies;
- (b) Those to the great physical forces and phenomena of the earth;

^{*} The Prayer-Book: its history, language, and contents. By Evan Daniel, M.A. London: Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd. 1905.

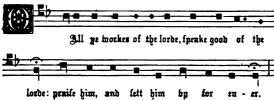

(c) Those to the brute part of creation; (d) Those to our fellow-men. The The last group are addressed to the children of men generally, and in particular to Israel, to the priests of the Lord, the servants of the Lord, the spirits and souls of the righteous, to holy and humble men of heart everwhere, and to Ananias, Azarias, and Misael, as conspicuous examples of holiness and humility.

With regard to the music of the English version of the Benedicite, Merbecke is the starting point. In his 'The booke of Common praier noted' (1550) he gives the following plainsong setting:

For the tyme of lent in the place of Te Deum.

Benedicite.

The words in the above setting are the same as in the First Prayer-Book of Edward VI. (1549), they being superseded by the present version in the Second Prayer-Book of 1552. This music is the same as that in the Sarum Breviary, but simplified in accordance with Cranmer's wish that 'the note that shall be made thereunto, would not be full of notes, but as near as may be for every syllable a note, so that it may be sung distinctly and devoutly.' An arrangement in modern notation of Merbecke's setting has been edited by Sir George Martin, who has added a suitable organ accompaniment.

Purcell composed an elaborate setting of the Benedicite in Service form, but he garbled the words by omitting several repetitions of the refrain. His setting begins thus:

Purcell's contractions begin after verse 5, one refrain 'Praise Him and magnify Him for ever') doing duty for the following verse groups, or single verses:

6—9	15—17	22, 23	28-31
10, 11	18	24-26	32
12-14	19-21	27	_

Verse 18 ('O let the earth') occupies twenty-three bars of triple time, while verses 30 and 31 are thus shortened: 'O ye spirits and souls of the righteous, the holy and humble men of heart, bless ye the Lord, &c. Purcell alternates between triple and duple time, beginning in the former (as shown in our example) and ending (Gloria Patri) in duple time.

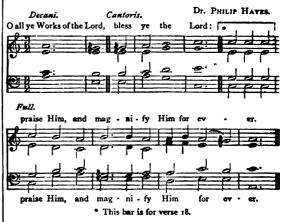

original autograph of this 17th century setting is in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. It is an imposing manuscript,—nearly three feet wide and two feet deep the large folded sheet being signed 'H. P.

Dr. Blow also composed an elaborate setting in E minor of this Canticle which does not seem to have been published. There is in the British Museum a transcript-made by the late Mr. W. H. Husk, from a copy formerly in the possession of Joseph Warren of Blow's setting, which, like Purcell's, alternates between triple and duple time. It begins:

Assuming Husk's transcript to be correct—and there seems no reason to doubt its accuracy-Blow has not only garbled the verses, but he has made his setting still shorter than Purcell's by omitting verses 17 and - 'lightnings and clouds' and 'beasts and cattle'! His verse groups, in regard to reducing the number of refrain repetitions, differ from those of Purcell.

Dr. Philip Hayes was probably the first to compose a chant-form setting in triple time and, like Blow's setting of this jubilant hymn of praise, in the minor key! Here it is:

As this music is the same for every verse, it becomes monotonous to a degree; even the final chord of the Gloria Patri is minor. Moreover, the syncopation in bar 3 creates a most distressing false accent.

Modern composers have followed Dr. Philip Hayes by adopting the triple-time chant form. Three chants The are often used, these being sometimes by different composers, as, for example, the well-known setting by Stainer, Winn and Walker. Other favourite settings are those by Champneys, de Lacy and Gibbs (Gloria Patri by Stainer); W. T. Best; F. Iliffe; Myles B. Foster (in F, chant form, but agreeably varied); C. H. Lloyd (in E flat); Stainer (in D) and John E. West (in C). Perhaps the most elaborate of modern Benedicites is the effective setting by Mr. Charles Macpherson, sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

With regard to the charge of monotony which is brought against the Benedicite, it has been well said: 'The monotony of form is itself effective. It is like the monotony of the winds or the waves; and powerfully suggests to the imagination the amplitude and splendour of God's world, and the sublimity of the universal chorus of praise.'

DEATH OF 'MR. TOPE.'

Readers of the article on Rochester Cathedral in our March issue may remember the reference to 'Mr. Tope,' the friend of Charles Dickens, who, in 'The Mystery of Edwin Drood,' has immortalised him as 'Chief Verger and Showman' of Rochester's stately fane. On March 23 'Mr. Tope,' otherwise Mr. William Miles, died at Rochester in his ninety-second year. He had every claim to be regarded as an out and out cathedralist. Born in 1816, he became a chorister of Rochester Cathedral at the age of nine, afterwards singing as a lay-clerk and then successively under-verger and verger—his length of service covering a period of seventy-five years, when he was pensioned by the Dean and Chapter. His sons were all choristers of Dickens's 'Cloisterham' (Rochester), some of them doubtless contemporary with either the late Professor Armes, the brothers Bridge (Sir Frederick and Professor J. C.), the late Dr. Crow, of Ripon, Dr. D. J. Wood, of Exeter, and the late Joseph Maas. The youngest of his thirteen children, Mr. R. E. Miles, has followed in his father's footsteps as a cathedral singer, he having been an assistant vicarchoral (bass) of St. Paul's Cathedral for upwards of twenty-one years: he is also well known as a professor of singing at the Royal Academy of Music and the Guildhall School of Music.

A VETERAN LAY-CLERK.

It is with regret that we record the death of Mr. Thomas Hunt, the doyen lay-clerk of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, where his tenor voice has been heard for the long period of forty-four years. Born at Gloucester, April 12, 1836, Mr. Hunt began his lay-clerk career at Carlisle Cathedral in 1858. At the end of 1861 he was at Worcester. From there he proceeded to Windsor, in 1864, singing at the royal chapel until almost the time of his death, and at Eton College Chapel until the two establishments were chorally divided. Mr. Hunt, who died at Bath on March 16, after much suffering, was a highly respected musician. His son, Mr. Hubert W. Hunt, is organist of Bristol Cathedral.

A TRANSPOSED BUILTON OF 'HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN.'

In order to supply a want that has long been felt in smaller parishes and for use on week-day services, the proprietors of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' have issued a new edition of that popular collection, in which the tunes have been transposed into lower keys than formerly. The book—of 484 pages and oblong quarto size—contains 800 tunes, consisting of all those in the new edition of 1904 and the greater number of those in the old edition that seemed to require transposition. Copious indexes enable the volume to be used with either of the standard editions. The Roman numerals for those tunes that are in the old and not in the new edition have a somewhat awkward appearance—e.g., ccclxxxv. and dxcviii.—but with practice any initial difficulty in this respect will soon be overcome. Only the words of the last verse of each hymn are printed, but no self-respecting organist would think of accompanying a hymn without following the words throughout. The price of the book is five shillings net.

The St. George's United Free Church Musical Association, Edinburgh, gave their annual recital in the church on March 6, the soloists being Miss J. Black Thomson, Miss Robina Grant and Mr. G. L. Ross. The vocal music on that occasion consisted of the opening solo and chorus of Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm ('O come, let us worship'), Gounod's 'Gallia,' and a selection from Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' which included the solo 'Slowly, slowly up the wall,' the evening hymn ('O gladsome Light'), and the solo and chorus 'The night is calm and cloudless,' followed by the Choral Epilogue. All the above pieces were carefully sung by the choir under the inspiriting direction of Mr. Alfred Hollins, organist of the church. In addition to playing the whole of the accompaniments—from memory, of course—Mr. Hollins gave a masterly rendering of Mozart's Fantasia in F. He imparted further variety into a most enjoyable evening's music by tasteful renderings of two charming pieces for the organ, a Berceuse and a Scherzo, composed by M. Rousseau, the gifted organist of St. Clothilde, Paris.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

The annual National Welsh Festival was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on February 28 with its customary impressiveness. Previous to the service the band of H.M. Irish Guards (conducted by Mr. C. H. Hassel), in the absence of the Grenadier Guards Band, 'commanded' at Court, played a selection of pieces. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to a setting in the key of A by Mr. R. Meyrick Roberts, and the anthem was Barnby's 'Da yw moliannu yr Arglwydd' ('It is a good thing to give thanks'). The hymns, in which the large congregation heartily joined, created a splendid volume of sound. After the Blessing, one verse (in Welsh) of 'God bless the Prince of Wales' and one verse (in English) of 'God save the King' were sung: with these exceptions the entire service was in the language of the Principality. The choir consisted of 200 voices, and the duties of conductor and organist were interchanged and ably discharged by Mr. R. Meyrick Roberts, organist of St. Mary's, The Boltons, S.W., and Mr. David J. Thomas, organist of St. Anselm's, Davies Street, W. As an outgoing voluntary Sullivan's In Memorium overture was played by the band of the Irish Guards together with the organ with imposing effect.

A choir festival was held at St. George's Church, Chorley, on February 19, in which the choirs of Blackrod, Charnock Richard, Eccleston and St. George's Churches, numbering 120 voices, took part. The anthems were 'The sun shall be no more' (Woodward) and 'O give thanks' (Elvey). Mr. J. Stubbs, who had organized the festival, presided at the organ.

Mr. H. J. Taylor's sacred cantata 'The Last Supper' was sung in St. James's Church, Dover, on February 19 under the direction of the composer.

Mr. J. H. Maunder's Lenten cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' was sung by the choir of St. Mark's Presbyterian Church, Greenwich, on March 18. The soloists were Miss Isabel D. Harris, Miss Kentish and Mr. Edgar Kentish. Mr. James Kentish, organist and director of the choir, presided at the organ.

Bach's 'St. John' Passion is being performed at St. Anne's Church, Soho, every Friday evening during Lent, under the careful and experienced direction of Mr. E. H. Thorne, organist of the church, with Miss Beatrice Thorne at the organ.

At a special Lenten musical service held at Tonbridge Parish Church on March 18, the first performance took place of the sacred choral rhapsody entitled 'Among the trees' (Part II., 'The Garden of Gethsemane,' and Part III., 'The Garden of the Sepulchre') composed by Dr. J. W. G. Hathaway, organist of the church. A band and chorus of 100 performers took part in the service, which included the choruses 'Behold, all flesh is as grass' from Brahms's Requiem, 'Then round about the starry throne,' from Handel's 'Samson,' and Dr. Hathaway's orchestral prelude, 'In Te Domine, speravi.'

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung at Holy Trinity Church, Coventry, for the first time in that town, on March 19. Dr. A. H. Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, played the organ accompaniments, and Mr. Percy E. Hughes conducted.

Two performances of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' are announced to take place in the church of St. George the Martyr, Southwark, on Palm Sunday evening at 6.30, and on Good Friday evening at 7, under the direction of Mr. H. London Pope, organist and director of the choir.

Dr. H. J. Edwards's oratorio 'The risen Lord' will be performed, with full orchestral accompaniment, in St. Michael's Church, Coventry, on April 30, under the direction of the composer.

The Festival Book for the Jubilee of St. Hilary's Church, Wallasey, Cheshire, to be held on July 2, contains Professor J. C. Bridge's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C, and an anthem composed by Dr. James Lyon, 'Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers,' for tenor solo, quartet and chorus, with accompaniment for organ, brass and drums. The words of the anthem have been selected by the Rev. Canon Cogswell, Rector of Wallasey.

The Thomas Threlfall Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music will be competed for in April. This Scholarship is open to British subjects of either sex under the age of twenty-one years on the date of the competition, and will be awarded to that candidate who exhibits the greatest promise in organ playing. The successful candidate will be entitled to two years' free tuition at the Royal Academy of Music, and in cases of sufficient merit this period may be extended. Present and past students of the institution are ineligible. Full particulars may be obtained from the Secretary.

The new five-manual organ (built by Messrs. P. Conacher & Co., Huddersfield), the gift of Mr. H. G. Harris, in the Parish Church, Calne, was dedicated on February 20, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung. The soloists were Master Leslie Battensby and Mr. Harry Stubbs (St. Paul's Cathedral). Mr. W. R. Pullein, organist of the church, conducted. Organ recitals have been given on the new instrument by Mr. W. Wolstenholme, Mr. John Pullein, and Mr. W. R. Pullein.

At the recent dedication of a new Lych Gate at St. Peter's Church, Staines, built and presented to Sir Edward and Lady Clarke as a souvenir of their silver wedding, a new anthem, 'O how amiable,' specially composed for the occasion by Mr. D. Willard, organist and choirmaster of the church, was sung.

Reviews.

Claude-Achille Debussy. By Mrs. Franz Liebich. [John Lane.]

The recent visit of M. Debussy to England has awakened increased interest in his music; what more natural, therefore, than that the life and works of this much-discussed French composer should form one of the volumes in Mr. John Lane's 'Living masters of music' series? Mrs. Liebich admits that, owing to M. Debussy's reserve and dislike to publicity, her monograph is more or less poor in biographical material. She says: 'To one who has striven hand and soul, work is its own supreme reward, and renown somewhat of a non-essential detail.' As to the thoroughness of that 'hand and soul' work, it is evidenced in a letter which M. Debussy wrote to M. Louis Laloy: 'It is not possible to publish the Suite Bergamesque,' he says, 'I am still in need of twelve bars for the Sarabande.' We are further told that 'as none of his previous ideas had satisfied him, sooner than publish the piece with the slightest defect he This preferred to wait patiently for the right inspiration.' This 'reverential feeling for perfection' may be commended to those young composers who too eagerly and too immaturely rush into print.

It is interesting to learn that M. Debussy was early drawn to Rameau and Weber, that Shakespeare is one of his favourite poets, that he is fond of travel, and that he is an

The greater part of the book enthusiastic lover of nature. is perforce devoted to criticisms and analyses of his compositions and his modus operandi in bringing them into existence. As a writer on musical subjects, M. Debussy is gisted with an incisive style. For two years, 1901-02, he was music critic on the Revue Blanche, and in 1903 he contributed in the same capacity to the columns of Gil Blas. In this connection his remarks on Wagner's 'Ring,' which we give on page 233, are certainly entertaining. If one is unable to agree with all the deductions which Mrs. Liebich has so well expressed in her book, the little volume is an interesting contribution to musical literature; it should certainly find many readers by reason of the light it throws on the life-work of one of the most modern of modernists in

The Threshold of Music. By William Wallace. [Macmillan & Co., Ltd.]

This book, to quote its sub-title, is 'An enquiry into the development of the musical sense.' In his preface, the author remarks that music has 'the advantage of supplying us with documents which demonstrate, step by step, the highest effort of which the musical sense was capable at definite points in its evolution.' Our author begins his survey at an early period, but in order to see his way of tracing the development of the art, let us start with Bach. We are told that although he 'was able to assure himself that a hitherto uncharted world of sound lay beyond the horizon, he hesitated to go in search of it.' To speak of the great old master as 'hesitating' is, to say the least of it, peculiar. Kuhnau set before him striking examples of a comparatively new art, and Bach, evidently attracted by it, wrote two pieces of a 'programme' character; but after that there was no hesitation; he decided not to work on such lines. As to 'the uncharted world of sound, he went boldly in search of it, and what he discovered still renders his music powerful. Of Haydn and Mozart we read that it was 'their function to build the house in order that others might shelter in it and then furnish it according to their needs.' This statement places these great masters about on a level with Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, who, although a highly-gifted musician, was not a genius. Again, of Mozart we are told that 'in his instrumental compositions there is not a vestige of a sign-saving in one, or perhaps two chamber works—that he realized the depth and magnitude of man's estate.' Surely such an opinion needs no comment! Beethoven is described as 'the first to suggest the relation of music to other mental states,' a aspect of art, which Beethoven only 'suggested,' came into existence, so we read, 'after 1830.' Of Wagner we are informed that 'Mozart, Beethoven, Weber and Meyerbeer all suggested to him the means of distinction.' The author stops at Wagner. The predecessors of the Bayreuth master are represented as important stages in the development of the Art. But even when we have arrived at Wagner, as the title of the volume indicates we are still only on the 'threshold.' At present the author feels 'we are all groping in a mist.' This would indeed seem to point to a state of degeneration rather than to one of development.

Studies of the 18th century in Italy. By Vernon Lee. Second edition, illustrated; with a new preface. [T. Fisher Unwin.]

More than twenty-five years have passed since 'Vernon Lee' published her 'Studies.' She has now re-issued them as they originally appeared, but enriched with a large number of interesting and excellent illustrations, selected by Dr. Guido Biagi, of the Laurentian Library, Florence, which greatly enhance the attractiveness of the volume. further and no less important addition is a new preface devoted to music. In this 'Retrospective Chapter,' as it is called, the fluent pen of the authoress seeks to prove that throughout the 18th century, and [to the best of her knowledge] throughout the 17th, the evolution of the musical phrase, the evolution of what I should like to call the expenses of his chamber concerts of British music, melodic form, took place in Italy.' She graphically describes Miss Hilda Lett (violinist) for her further studies abroad.

the difference between the conditions of 18th century musical life in Germany and Italy—the ecclesiastical environment of one country and the operatic atmosphere of the other-the contrast between 'Teutonic earnestness' and 'Latin levity.' Bach can out Bach himself in his Thomas Kirche'; she says, 'he is playing and composing for the Eternities above, not for the citizens of Leipzig below. But the Italian maestro is not composing for Eternities above. The only above for him, are those high regions of the theatre where lazzaroni and gondoliers are apt to fling orange peel and over-ripe tomatoes among hideous howls and cat-calls. But the boxes are even worse, where the patricians and fine ladies sit playing cards between the chief airs, and keeping up an offensive chatter when the music bores them. . . . These are the persons, all too human and gifted with human, nay, animal modes of expression, whom the Italian composer feels listening to his music, as he sits—and sits with terror, perhaps-directing at his harpsichord, watching for the first hiss and howl that is to sweep his opera off the stage.

Later on 'Vernon Lee' refers to the 'necessity' of the 18th century Italian composer 'being intelligible to an audience which was only imperfectly musical and very imperfectly attentive.' She adds: 'It meant clearness of intention, concision, definiteness of tonality, rhythm, accent, and interval; definiteness of harmonic effect in the accompaniments and definiteness in the employment of separate instruments; definite distribution of interest between voices and orchestra, definite fitting on to words, definite expression and dramatic effect; and, more important, perhaps, than everything else save the establishment of well-marked tonality and rhythm, it meant that precision of phrase, that possibility of breaking up into small, varying, but intelligent phrases and groups of phrases, without which concerted music in the modern sense (as distinguished from music based on counterpoint) could never have come into existence.' These 'definite' conditions are in no less measure—nay, in a greater degree—applicable to much 20th century creative music. The volume would make an agreeable present by reason of its varied contents and handsome appearance.

THE VAGUENESS OF MUSICAL NOMENCLATURE.

With the express object of promoting a discussion that might ultimately lead to greater definiteness and consistency in the use of musical terms, Mr. F. Gilbert Webb read a paper on the above subject before the Musical Association on February 18.

At the present moment, the lecturer said, so great is the uncertainty of the technical terminology of the Art, that it is impossible to discuss its fundamental principles without being more or less misunderstood. The result of this is particularly unfortunate in regard to students, causing much confusion of thought and want of clearness and significance in their performances. The most important, least understood, and misused term is 'rhythm.' The basis of music is rhythm and melody; the former represents movement, and the latter some kind of vocal utterance. These two elements, although generally appearing in combination, are by nature distinct, and can exist independently of each other. Rhythm can exist without change of pitch, while melody must have change of pitch. The lecturer suggested therefore that the word rhythm should be used exclusively to indicate the suggestion of movement in music, the animating spirit which gave it life and character, and that the term should not be confounded, as at present, with accentuation, stress, and phrasing or period. The word tempo or time should be confined to the signification of pace, and not confused with accent. In the same way triple and common time should be triple and common measure. Great confusion exists concerning tone. This term should be confined to its significance of implying a certain quality of sound, in itself indivisible. The term 'semitone' is a barbarous and misleading combination of two languages. If semitone means anything, it suggests half the power of a full tone, but to say that the note C in itself is a tone, and that from C to D is also a tone, is illogical. The term semitone should be banished in favour of half-note, because 'note' conveyed a distinct of the control of the c distinct idea of place, and consequently of distance, from one note to another. This is particularly so with string players, and the term half-note suggests a lesser interval of space. The words 'scale' and 'mode' should not be confounded: the former should be confined to its sense of an arbitrary series of notes, the character of which is decided by the major or minor mode. The word 'key' should always be used in relation to pitch, but it should not be applied to the notes of a pianoforte; one might just as well speak of the keys of a scale.

It is far better to retain the use of Italian words than to coin others, for, as music is a universal language, it is desirable that terms universally understood should be used; but it is time that the word Andantino should be accepted in modern music as indicating a less slow pace than Andante, just as Allegretto signifies a less quick tempo than Allegro.

The prevalent use of polyglot directions is to be deprecated. Mr. Webb concluded his paper by commenting upon the use of terms of painting in music which had become prevalent with the advance of programme music. The term 'tonecolour' is useful and permissible. There is a tendency to use it in a distinct sense apart from timbre, to indicate a particular tone-quality of an instrument or of a singer's voice particular tone-quality of an instrument or of a singer's voice as superimposed on the natural timbre of the instrument or voice. The word tone-colour being accepted, tone-painting could scarcely be rejected; albeit it was less significant. We hear a great deal just now about atmosphere, especially in connection with the compositions of Mr. Debress: Le its explanation assume that it is that of Mr. Debussy. In its ordinary acceptation it implies that appropriateness of detail which compels conviction; but in the new French musical cult, atmosphere acquires another significance, that of the nebulous, or, to bring it within the experience of all, 'foggy,' a term which might be applied to a good deal of modern music. The use of terms of painting, however, should be employed with caution, as they are likely to lead to extravagances. The best safeguard against such exaggeration is to have the meaning of accredited musical terms clearly defined. What is wanted is the compilation of a list of terms that will avoid the employment of the same word with two or more different meanings.

At the conclusion of the paper there ensued a considerable discussion in which Dr. Southgate (the chairman), Dr. Maclean, Mr. Cobbett, Mr. Percy Baker and others took part. The consensus of opinion was in support of the lecturer's views.

THE VITALITY OF MELODY.

At a meeting of the Musical Association held at Messrs. Broadwood's Rooms, on March 17, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland in the chair, Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, read a paper on 'The vitality of melody.'

The lecturer pointed out that the older musicians appeared to have had a better recognition of melody pure and simple than was the case to-day. He spoke of harmonizing delicate airs which, in the process, had been smothered like Desdemona by brutal musical Othellos, and of 17th and had been smothered like 18th century melodies which had suffered at the hands of modern unsympathetic 'arrangers.' In some instances, that well-known proverb regarding meat and cooks might be applied to melody and musicians! In melody we had a spontaneous growth, while harmony was a gradual development, like language. In regard to tunes we could not go back farther and fare worse, for old melody appealed to-day no less forcibly than it did at the time of its production.

'I verily believe,' said Mr. Kidson, 'that if any enterprising music hall artist (so-called) were to adapt comic words to "Sumer is i cumen in" the man in the the tune! Melodies might go to sleep for a century or more, but if they became dormant they were roused like musical Rip Van Winkles or 'Sleeping Beauties,' and took their place in the ranks of modern music. He instanced how street tunes were in a number of cases merely revivals of old melodies, and how these, from their merit, had attained immense popularity. 'I have great faith in the popular verdict,' said the lecturer, 'when we can get that verdict into proper focus; but this correct focussing can only be done in at least a couple of generations, and when these concur, I think we may accept as true art that which has won their united approval.'

As to party tunes, he thought that a good tune might carry forward a bad cause, and instanced what effect these political melodies had had upon different factions. Words of political and other songs did not have much influence on the popularity of a tune; it was the air itself and the generally expressed sentiments which were responsible for the tune's existence. For instance, how few, loyal though they be, knew the complete words of 'God save the King,' and 'Yankee Doodle' had practically no words at all.

French and German national songs were mentioned. this connection it was shown how many French airs had become embedded among our own national music. 'The become embedded among our hardoar indict. The keys of Heaven' was one of these. Originally composed by Devigny for a shadow-pantomime performer in Paris about the year 1773, it had become traditionalized in England. 'In my cottage,' and others, were of the same kind. There was also a curious instance of a Swedish dance tune, which, after serving the needs of both the Jacobite and the Hanoverian causes, became a drinking song and ultimately the march of the Scottish Weavers! Other tunes having vital quality were mentioned, and the evolution of the air 'The low-back'd car' was traced from a succession of early

The musical illustrations to the lecture were most charmingly and sympathetically played on the violin by Miss Dorothy M. Fletcher.

THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY.

Music of the 16th to the 18th centuries, interspersed with early French dances, proved a most enjoyable entertainment provided by the Master (Mr. C. T. D. Crews) of the Worshipful Company of Musicians on February 27. And what more appropriate rendezvous for such old-world performances could be found than Stationers' Hall? The music of the concert, directed by Miss Nellie Chaplin, included a Sonata in F by Dr. Boyce (arranged by Mr. F. Cunningham Woods for a string quartet); two violoncello solos, 'La du Vaucel,' by Forqueray fils, and 'Brilliante,' by Marais, played by Miss Mabel Chaplin; two harpsichord solos, 'Le coucou,' by Daquin, and Lesson in A, by A. Scarlatti, played by Miss Nellie Chaplin; Handel's Oboe concerto in G minor, with quartet accompaniment, soloist, Mr. H. H. Stanishaus; Purcell's Violin sonata in G minor, played by Miss Kate Chaplin; while Sir Frederick Bridge, the Prolocutor of the evening, played on a harpsichord, made by Kirkman in 1789, a Gavotte in C and a Samfonia by Francesco Corbetta. The dances consisted of a Chaconne from Purcell's 'Faerie Queene'; a Sarabande ('Isse'), by Destouches; a Minuet ('Le bourgeois gentilhomme') and a Gavotte ('Le ballet du Roi') by Lully; and 'The Queen's command' from the 'Parthenia' of Orlando Gibbons. Miss Flora Mann, 'the singer,' agreeably diversified the proceedings by her vocal excellence, and, in addition to the players above mentioned, the string quartet was completed by Miss Maud Foster-Evans (viola). The dancers were the Misses Dorothy Sowett, Maud Donie, Marjorie Jewson, Beatrice Lake, Marjorie Newman, Muriel Ridley, Hermie Woolnoth and Winifred Woolnoth. An illustrated recherch! programme, compiled by Dr. T. Lea Southgate, was quite in harmony with a most attractive evening of music and dance.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mr. Jean Sibelius was the bright particular star at the concert on February 27. As the distinguished Finnish composer stepped on to the platform to conduct his Symphony in C, he met with a very hearty reception. This was not, however, his first public appearance in this country, as he conducted his E minor Symphony (No. 1) and 'Finlandia' Suite at the Liverpool Orchestral Society's concert of December 2, 1905: nevertheless, he was warmly welcomed to London. One merit of the northern visitor's new symphony is its conciseness, an attribute for which one is devoutly thankful in these days of dreary debilitating diffuseness. This three-movement work, which occupies only twenty-seven minutes in performance, is constructed on themes that are Scandinavian in character and not without melodic attractiveness. The remainder of the concert does not call for detailed notice. It opened with Mozart's charming Sérénade nocturne (No. 6) in D, for string quartet and orchestra, daintily played by the Philharmonic band, and concluded with Brahms's 'Academic' overture. Mr. Herbert Fryer gave a brilliant performance of Eugen d'Albert's Pianoforte concerto (No. 2) in E, and Miss Esta d'Argo sang Beethoven's 'Praise the Redeemer' ('Mount of Olives') with much acceptance. Dr. Cowen, who conducted, was very cordially greeted on his return to the seene of his former triumphs. For a wonder, the concert was over at ten o'clock!

BACH CHOIR.

This now comparatively old organization (it was founded in 1876) afforded good proof of its vitality at its seventy-first concert given at the Queen's Hall on March 18. The programme blended the old and the new in fair proportion. The event had a special interest, because this was the first concert given by the choir under the direction of the new conductor, Dr. H. P. Allen, the performance this season at the Joachim Memorial concert having been a joint one in which others co-operated. The programme was as follows:

The 'Magnificat' well served to show the mettle of the choir. It was apparent that the music had been carefully studied. There was unity and assurance in the attack: the tone, if never imposing, was at least agreeable, and the general style was refined. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Alice Venning, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. William Higley. Without detriment to the other artists it may be recorded that the deepest impression was made by Miss Dilys Jones in the alto solo 'Esurientes implevit bonis.' Her performance was admirable as vocalization and as interpretation. Can it be that the vague, misty form of accompaniment used in some of the solos is what the composer intended? It is difficult to believe that such nebulosity is veritable Bach. The 'Brandenburg' concerto was a joy to all. It was beautifully played by the soli violin, flute, oboe and trumpet, an anonymous quartet of first-rate artists. A special commendation is due to the trumpeter for the truly wonderful delicacy of his playing. The beauties of Sir Hubert Parry's symphony would have been more apparent if there had been less formality and more interpretation in the performance. This work, one of the composer's most serious and important contributions to the Art, demands and deserves close study.

'Begräbnissgesang' is a short oborus (with semi-chorus, which was effectively sung on this occasion as a soli quartet) with orchestra. It is published in Novello's anthem series with English words under the title of 'Lord, we leave Thy servant sleeping.' Naturally it is devotional and solemn, but there are occasional gleams of hope, and the music has unusual simplicity for Brahms. Dr. Vaughan Williams's work was favourably noticed in these columns on the occasion of its first production at the last Leeds Festival. Much praise is due to the Back Choit for their appreciative performance. Some parts of the work improve with acquaintance, but the middle sections seem over-developed. Dr. Williams is permeated with the Brahms iddiom: but great things are possible to a composer who can exhibit such power.

Dr. Allen conducted with eathusiasm and, certainly so far as the choral pieces were concerned, with marked ability. Obviously he works very bard in the act of conducting, but this anxiety and enthusiasm will doubtless be tempered when he and his resources understand one another more perfectly. The orchestra, now rapidly acquiring a high reputation under the name of the New Symphony Orchestra, again proved its high efficiency.

NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

This excellent organization pursues its course of bringing forward novelties, or at least what are novelties to the English public generally. At the concert given on February 26 the following was the programme:

Nothing else that Dvorák wrote is more absolutely beautiful than the G major Symphony. It will surely go far to perpetuate his name and fame.

Mr. Coates sang Mr. Bantock's highly individual music in his usual impassioned and temperamental style. Mr. Frederick Delius's 'Paris' is an original work, but it cannot be said to conjure up any specifically Parisian atmosphere. It must therefore be judged as abstract music, and from this standpoint it is undoubtedly interesting and clever. Wolf's delicately beautiful 'Italian serenade' was admirably played. The orchestral programme was as follows:

Dvorák's work is a curiously naïve specimen of musical realism. The story upon which it is founded is gruesome, although it has a happy ending, but the music is full of brilliancy and the themes are melodious. The Norfolk Rhapsody contains some excellent folk-tunes, 'Ward the Pirate' being very prominent. Dr. Williams is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of folk-music, and has the skill to fuse it into very attractive art forms. 'Queen Mab,' performed without the choral epilogue, made a great success. The 'Petite' Suite exhibited M. Debussy to advantage, the dreamy, vague idioms with which his name is associated not being apparent in this early work.

Mr. Thomas Meux, the vocal soloist, sang Gluck's 'C'est un torrent' and three songs from Gretry's 'Anacréon.' One of the latter, 'Chanson bachique,' was encored with great fervency. Mr. Thomas Beecham conducted both concerts with considerable mastery and insight.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

The interest and enterprise which characterize these enjoyable concerts continue to be maintained. On February 29 the Leeds Choral Union was the attraction. Under the baton of their skilful conductor, Dr. Henry Coward, they sang Bach's 'Magnificat,' and, with Mr. Henry J. Wood at the conductor's desk, the choral portion of Beethoven's ninth Symphony showed, especially in the latter work, what well-trained Yorkshire choralists can do. The novelty of the afternoon was Debussy's setting of Dante Gabriel Rossetti's poem 'The Blessed Damozel,' performed on this occasion for the first time in England. M. Debussy sent this cantata, composed between the years 1888 and 1893, from Rome to the Paris Conservatoire, having obtained the Prix de Rome. The work was not, however, accepted by the authorities 'on the ground of its musical audacity.' The cantata, although a comparatively early work, breathes that 'atmosphere' which has become associated with the French composer's method: in this instance, however, the air is less rarefied than his latest productions. Not only does the music reflect the tenderness of the poem, but it makes a direct appeal to the listener by its sincerity and true beauty. It is a work that one would like to hear again, especially under the same favourable conditions as on this occasion. 'The Blessed Damozel' is written for soprano and mezzo-soprano soloists, female chorus, and orchestra. Miss Perceval Allen and Miss Elsie Nicholl were efficient principals, the ladies of the choir sang with a refinement worthy of all praise, and Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted the work with all possible care and discretion. The soloists in the Choral symphony were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Molly Deane, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. William Higley.

At the concert on March 14, Mr. Wood gave what is claimed to be the first performance of a Divertimento in B flat composed by Haydn for oboes, horns (3), and serpent. This little work, from a manuscript preserved in the Royal Library, Berlin, contains the 'Chorale Sancti Antonii,' upon which, it will be remembered, Brahms wrote a masterly set of variations. It would seem as if Haydn himself had not composed the tune made famous by Brahms, as the title-page of the score bears the inscription 'Divertimento mit dem Chorale St. Antonii.' The little piece, probably composed for outdoor performance by Prince Esterhazy's band, consists of four movements, of which the second is the Chorale, and the third a delightful Haydnesque minuet. Miss May Harrison added to her rapidly-growing reputation by a truly artistic performance of the solo part in Bach's Concerto No. 2, in E, for violin, strings and organ (ably played by Mr. F. B. Kiddle), and the remainder of the programme consisted of the 'Eroica' symphony and two Wagner pieces. On March 19, a Wagner-Tchaikovsky concert was given, at which Mischa Elman played the Russian master's Violin concerto with all his wonted skill. All three concerts were given at Queen's Hall and were conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, except Bach's Magnificat, as already stated.

MR. EDWARD GERMAN'S 'ROMEO AND JULIET' MUSIC.

The effectiveness of the performances of 'Romeo and Juliet' at the Lyceum Theatre, which commenced on March 14, is much enhanced by the incidental music composed by Mr. Edward German. With the exception of sundry revisions and a few additions, this music was originally written for Mr. Forbes Robertson's production of the immortal love story, produced on September 21, 1895, at the old Lyceum Theatre, but the strains are as fresh to-day as though the ink had scarcely dried upon the paper. The Pastorale, the Nocturne, and the Pavane are delightful numbers, while the Dramatic interlude is full of significance. Music lovers who attend the Lyceum performance must wonder why the Suite formed from this music is not more often heard in our concert-rooms. Pianists may be reminded that the composer has made excellent arrangements of his attractive music for their instrument, and for violin and pianoforte.

BACH'S MASS IN B MINOR AT CAMBRIDGE AND OXFORD.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.)

A very noteworthy performance of the Mass was given at the Guildhall, Cambridge, on March 10, by the University Musical Society, whose chorus was on this occasion amalgamated with that of the Oxford Bach Society. Dr. Alan Gray conducted, Dr. H. P. Allen—an old member of the C.U.M.S., now organist of New College, Oxford,—presided at the organ, and the solo singers were Miss Edith McCullagh, Miss N. Anderton, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. J. Campbell McInnes. The most noticeable characteristics of the performance were clearness and simplicity. Dr. Gray rightly conceives the function of a conductor as being to interpret his author, not to embellish him. So the continuous abstinence from far-fetched 'effects' produced a result that was in the highest degree effective. The vocal solos, exacting as they are, though not really ungrateful, received satisfactory interpretation, each in its several character illuminating the whole. Mr. Haydn Inwards, who led the orchestra, played the violin solo in the Benedictus with much taste and good effect. There was no applause during the performance, but Dr. Gray received a well-deserved ovation at the end.

On March 14, in the Town Hall, Oxford, the Choral and Philharmonic Society and the Bach Choir united their efforts and gave the great Cantor's masterpiece, under the able direction of Dr. Allen. The soloists were Miss Sichel, the Hon. Norah Dawnay, Mr. Child, and Mr. J. Campbell McInnes. The choir worked hard and well, and though the rendering was not in all respects perfect, several notable successes were obtained during the evening, and one and all are to be sincerely congratulated upon a performance which was far in advance of the one given by the same combined Societies four years ago.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

No more appropriate work for performance on Ash Wednesday could be named than Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.' This fact doubtless contributed to the large attendance at the Royal Albert Hall on March 4, when the work was sung by the Royal Choral Society, under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge. There were moments when greater intensity of expression would have been acceptable in the rendering of the choral portions, but on the whole the choir sang very fincly, and the choruses calling for volume of tone and breadth of phrasing were magnificently rendered. Mr. Gervase Elwes showed great advance in his reading of the name-part, infusing into it more manliness than on former occasions. Miss Gertrude Lonsdale's delivery of the words of the Angel was instinct with reverential feeling, and Mr. Dalton Baker was equally earnest as the Priest and the Angel of the Agony. Mr. H. L. Balfour, as usual, rendered efficient aid at the organ.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The students' concert held in the concert hall on February 25, was made memorable by the performance of a symphonic poem based upon Keats's 'Isabella,' composed by Mr. Frank Bridge. This work is another example of what may be termed musical melodrama, wherein the composer seems to revel in accentuating the gruesomeness of the story, and the instruments wrangle loud and long with suggestions of murderous intention. The cleverness of the instrumentation must be admitted, but so must the dire effects of the music. The composer conducted, and the orchestra showed the greatest goodwill towards realizing his desires, and presumably they were fulfilled. Happily the programme contained Schumann's genial Symphony in C, which was interpreted with tlan under the direction of Sir Charles Stanford. The soloists were Mr. G. Parkington, who showed promise in Dohnányi's Concertstück for vicloncello and orchestra, and Miss Maud E. Wright and Mr. Arthur Wynn sang admirably.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

At the sixth concert of the series, on March 2, the programme was as follows:

Overture, 'Manfred'	 		Schumann.
Variations on an original theme	 • •	• •
Pianoforte concerto (' The Emperor' Herr LENG	• •	• •	Beethoven.
			D
Symphony No. 6 (' Pastorale')	 • •		Beethoven.

It goes without saying that all the familiar music was adequately performed under Dr. Richter. Herr Lengyel played the Concerto with phenomenal technical skill, but can hardly be said to have realized the full breadth of this classic. At the seventh concert, on March 23, also under Dr. Richter, the programme was as follows:

Symphony in D (The Clock	k)	 		Haydn
Variations (on the Chorale	Brahms
Concerto in D minor for vi				Tartini
Violin Solos (a) Sérénade n				Tschaikovsky
(b) Perpetuum				Novacek
Overture 'Die Zauberflöte	٠	 		Mozart
Symphony No. 8, in F		 		Beethoven

Herr Ferencz Hegedus played his violin solos in finished and solid style and, needless to say, the orchestral music was brilliantly interpreted. Both concerts took place at Queen's Hall.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

The Alexandra Palace Choral Society found fine scope for its vocal ability and artistic zeal on March 7, in the rendering of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus.' Magnificent tone and splendid attack thrilled the audience, who eagerly showed their high appreciation of the artistic choral singing throughout the evening. The excellent results obtained by the Society are due to the enthusiastic conductor, Mr. Allen Gill, who is quite a genius in obtaining from his singers and players a poetic interpretation of the music that is set before them. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Mildred Jones, Mr. Charles Saunders, Mr. Ben Calvert and Mr. Robert Radford. Bach's B minor Mass was announced for performance on March 28, to which we hope to refer in our May issue.

MISS DOROTHEA WALENN.

The clever musicianship of Miss Dorothea Walenn was conspicuous at her concert on March 3 at Æolian Hall. Supported by the Æolian Orchestra, conducted by Miss Rosabel Watson, the concert-giver played with notable intelligence and significance in the familiar Violin concerto in B minor of Saint-Saëns, and in a little-known but interesting Suite Concertante by Cæsar Cui. She was no less successful in her renderings of a refined Romance by Emmeline Brook, and a characteristic and effective Harlequinade by Gerald Walenn. Further interest was imparted to the programme by a Serenade for orchestra composed by Dr. Vaughan Williams, which, although composed in 1898, had not previously been heard in London. The work is unpretentious and musicianly, the Scherzo being decidedly attractive. Mention is due of some remarkably humorous and apt illustrative music for orchestra, by Emma Lomax, to the fairy story of 'The Princess and the swineherd,' recited by Madame Ginnett.

The Westminster Orchestral Society's concert on March 5 took place at Kensington Town Hall, the Society having removed its locale from the Caxton Hall. The prominent features of the programme were Brahms's Violin concerts in D, the solo part played by Mr. Louis Pecskai, and Dvorák's Symphony in G. These works received an excellent interpretation by the orchestra, conducted by fr. Lennox Clayton. Miss Adelaide Rind was the vocalist.

Mr. Carlo Erici, a new tenor gifted with a voice of musical 'emotional timbre, made a very favourable impression at .ecitals on March 12 and 19 at Bechstein Hall. He ned most at home in music of an impassioned character, his right place would appear to be the operatic stage.

The St. Margaret's Musical Society gave great pleasure to a crowded audience at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Westminster, on February 28, by a praiseworthy performance of 'Elijah,' under the enthusiastic direction of the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins. The choir, numbering 250 voices, sang as though their hearts as well as their voices were in the music, and the orchestra, led by Miss Marion Thorpe, rendered valuable aid in the accompaniments.

CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC.

BRUSSELS QUARTET.

Two most enjoyable chamber concerts were given by the Brussels Quartet, respectively on February 27 and March 5, at Bechstein Hall. The rich volume of tone, the delicacy of detail, and the ensemble of this Quartet silence criticism. These qualities were particularly in evidence at the first concert in an interpretation of Debussy's String quartet in G minor (Op. 10), upon which quite a new light was thrown by the subtlety of the performance. At the second concert a particularly fine rendering was secured of Tchaikovsky's Quartet in D (Op. 11).

KRUSE QUARTET.

Of the lesser known works performed at the six subscription concerts given at Bechstein Hall, mention should be made of a manuscript Quintet in B flat minor for horn and strings, composed by Dr. Ernest Walker. It consists of three movements, severally headed Andante non troppo lento, Molto vivace con fuoco, and Allegretto grazioso, directions which indicate the effective contrast of the numbers. The music is pervaded by a romantic spirit which was happily accentuated by Mr. Borsdorf's expressive rendering of the horn part. At the final concert of the series, on March 21, the selection included Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor (Op. 34), with Mr. Howard Jones at the keyboard, and Schubert's Octet in F (Op. 166) for strings and wood-wind, the Kruse Quartet being augmented by Messrs. Haydn Waud, Charles Draper, B. J. Musket and Wilfred James.

MESSRS. BUSONI AND SERATO.

There are now so many gifted violinists claiming attention that newcomers must needs have exceptional abilities to make even a favourable impression. Mr. Arrigo Serato, who was introduced to Londoners by Mr. Busoni on March 3 at Bechstein Hall, may however be accounted an artist of high degree. The feature of his playing was the beautiful quality of tone, which, allied to emotional warmth of expression, a lively intelligence, and a fluent technique, invested his interpretations with peculiar charm and interest. Associated with the Italian pianist and composer, most enjoyable renderings were heard of Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 30, No. 2), and Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor, and presumably the correct reading was given of Mr. Busoni's second Sonata for violin and pianoforte. Londoners will doubtless hear more of Mr. Serato. It should be added that Mr. Busoni chose for his solo César Franck's seldom played 'Prelude, aria, and finale,' which so delighted his audience that two extra pieces were demanded and secured.

BARNS-PHILLIPS CONCERT.

The thirteenth series of these music-makings was brought to a close on March 7 at Bechstein Hall, where four new, pleasing and effective pieces for pianoforte, composed by Madame Ethel Barns, were played for the first time by Miss Maud Agnes Winter. The pieces are short and severally termed Prelude, Scherzo, Nocturne and Toccata, the music in each case justifying its title. Also there was performed the Suite for violin and pianoforte (Op. 19), by Madame Barns, produced at the first concert this season The executants were the composer and Miss Winter, the results justifying the repetition. Much success was achieved by Miss Dorothy Gandy by her skilful vocalisation, and Mr. Charles Phillips was heard in Schumann's 'Dichterliebe,' the excellent English translation by Mrs. R. H. Elkin being used.

WALENN QUARTET.

The Walenn Quartet is to be commended for the choice of works performed at its concert at Æolian Hall on February 28, for neither Dvorák's Quartet in G (Op. 106), nor that by Dittersdorf in E flat are well known, and neither, especially the former, deserves neglect. The performances were marked by intelligence and spirit, and the interpolation of songs, charmingly rendered by Miss Agnes Willing, completed an enjoyable evening.

WESSELY QUARTET.

The Wessely Quartet concluded its seventh season of chamber concerts on March 4, at Bechstein Hall. capabilities of this combination of players are too well-known and appreciated to necessitate attention being drawn to the excellency of their ensemble; but the admirable manner in which, assisted by Mr. James Lockyer and Mr. C. H. Crabbe, these musicians interpreted Brahms's sextet in G (Op. 36) should be recorded.

Musical Competition Festivals.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, U.S.A. New-Year's Day.

The Cambrian Club of this city organized this remarkably successful competition. It will be noted from the programme given below that the tests submitted will bear comparison generally with those used at the best English festivals. prizes, in money, were on the liberal Welsh Eisteddsod scale. The following are the chief particulars of the event:

PRESTON.

February 20, 21 and 22.

l'reston is fortunate in possessing a commodious and splendidly equipped public hall with minor halls attached. It is therefore well able to cater for musical competitions on the largest scale. But the town is even more fortunate in having amongst its citizens men of light and leading who are willing to give themselves great trouble to serve the interests of the community. This determined altruism was conspicuous in the promotion and achievement of the fourth annual competition held on the above dates. The schedule was an admirable one, because in the choice of tests it almost invariably hit the happy mean between the imposition of difficulties and the tendency of amateurs and the public to be contented with conventional idions and a limited the programme therefore was distinctly This being so, the almost overwhelming The educational. support that the festival gained was highly gratifying.

On the first day contralto, tenor and baritone soloists, organists, mixed-voice quartets and thirteen church and chapel choirs competed. The following were the tests and the chief results:

Contralto. - 'Cangio d'aspetto' ('Admeto') (Handel).

Contraito.— Cangio d'aspetto ('Admeto') (Handel).

1st, Miss Nancy Howe (Barnsley).

Baritone.—'Thy glorious deeds' ('Samson') (Handel).

1st, Mr. William Earl (Kendal).

Tenor.—Recit. 'Tis well, my friends,' and Air 'Call forth thy power' ('Judas Maccabæus') (Handel), and 'In the garden' (Granville Bantock).

1st, Mr. W. G. Bennett (Keighley) (Keighley)

Church Choirs (open).—'Go not far from me, O God,' (//ingarelli). 1st, Hoole Wesleyan (Mr. A. Holt). St. Thomas', Preston (Mr. William Croft).

The second day was devoted to the children. Owing to the co-operation of the education authority and the school teachers there was an overwhelming audience at the afternoon events. It had been announced that noncompeting children could attend on payment of twopence, and a half-holiday having been granted, between 5,000 and 6,000 children presented themselves for admission. As only 4,000 could be accommodated in the hall, about 1,000 had to be sent away and 500 were entertained in a smaller The organization was, of course, severely taxed, but it was equal to the occasion, and the behaviour of the children was most commendable. The great attraction was the action-song competition, a department of the application of music to school work in which the schools in the district are extraordinarily successful. Ten schools sent contingents in this class, each contributing a different action-song, and thus providing a varied entertainment. Talbot Street Wesleyan School, Southport (Miss Coppock) gained the chief prize. In another class for prepared pieces thirteen schools appeared, and some beautiful singing was heard. Chaucer Road Council School, Fleetwood (Mr. Charles Saer), headed the list. A writing-down-by-ear class yielded unexpectedly excellent results. Six children only were allowed from each school. Sixty notes were played in groups of three and four, and it was found that the six children from St. Mary's Street Wesleyan, Preston (Mr. H. Howarth), each working separately, had got every note right ! There was also some excellent sight-singing in one and two parts, St. Mary's and Christ Church (Mr. F. Whincup) especially distinguishing themselves. Thirteen boys and thirty girls sang in the solo-singing classes, and there were thirty-three junior pianists and thirteen violinists. At the evening concert an excellent performance of the cantata 'The Hours' (Roeckel) was given by the combined children's choirs, under the able direction of Mr. J. E. Adkins, the organist of the parish church. A fuller account of the day's proceedings, together with the ear-tests used, will be found in The School Music Review for March.

On the third day thirty soprano and bass soloists, eleven mixed-voice, three male-voice, and eight female voice choirs competed. All the competitions were open on this day. The chief results were as follows:

The chief results were as follows:

Mr. C. H. Fogg. The festival has the great advantage of the presidency of Dr. R. C. Brown, a medical man and well-informed musical amateur who is deeply and justify respected by his fellow townsmen. The hard-worked and able secretary is Mr. W. M. Miller, and the success of the event owes much in many ways to the judgment and . (A) of Mr. J. E. Adkins.

CARLISLE.

February 25, 26, 27.

This was the thirteenth annual festival held in this city. The entries were numerous and the results exhibited were often remarkably good. The singing of the 'girls_in business' choirs revealed gratifying natural capacity. The tone was sweet and pure, the enunciation was clear, and the execution refined. St. James's girls' choir (Mr. Bertram Lewis) did best in the chief class. The lads' choirs were also excellent.

The second day was for the children. There were twenty-seven entries. Brook Street (Miss Irving) gained seventy-seven marks out of eighty in one class and full marks for sight-singing. In the Challenge Shield Class Haltwhistle Council School (Mr. W. Keenleyside) sang quite beautifully and gained seventy-eight marks besides full marks for sight-singing. The St. Cuthbert choristers (Mr. Thomas Walrond) were first in another class. At the ensuing afternoon concert, the children's cantata 'Orpheus, Ly George Rathbone, was successfully performed by the combined choirs assisted by a small orchestra. Another important feature was the 'Radnor' suite for orchestra (Sir Hubert Parry), which was conducted by Mr. Bertram Lewis. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, the Cathedral organist, conducted.

On the third day nine female-voice choirs, eight mixedvoice choral societies, eight village choirs, three men's-voice choirs, seven treble and alto village choirs, eight church and chapel choirs, and nine quartet parties appeared. following are some of the principal results:

At the evening concert the chief choral piece was the eight-part motet 'Blessing and Glory' (Bach). This work and six part-songs were sung with fine effect by the combined choirs under the baton of Mr. Sydney Nicholson, whose active interest in the festival was a great factor in securing its success. The soloists were Miss Amy Holman and Mr. Robert Radford. The adjudicators at the competitions were Dr. McNaught and Mr. W. Ellis, of Durham Cathedral.

KENSINGTON. February 27.

This competitive scheme makes satisfactory progress. first confined to ladies' choirs, it recently enlarged its scope and now caters for mixed-voice choirs and string orchestras. Sections for schools have been discussed, and it may be hoped will soon be a feature of the competition. On the present occasion four church choirs (ladies' voices), four female-voice choirs, three mixed-voice choirs, and two orchestras competed. Wilton Road (Hon. Richard Strutt) was first in the church choir class, Mrs. Mary Layton's choir first in the three-part singing (female voices) and the sightsinging classes, and St. John's, Wilton Road, first in the four-part (female voices) class. In the two-part singing class the West Central Working Girls' Club was first, and in the mixed-voice class Mrs. Mary Layton was again successful. Of the two orchestras that competed, the Church Orchestral Society, under Dr. G. F. Huntley, secured the prize. The following were the test-pieces:

HERTFORDSHIRE AND NORTH MIDDLESEX.

February 27, 28, 29.

This festival was held as before at the Alexandra Palace. It was the second year of its institution, and again was an extraordinary success. It is evident that the educational aspect of the competitive festival movement is thoroughly appreciated in the country and suburban districts appealed to.

On the first day there were 140 pianists, 31 violinists, 3 viola players, 14 violoncellists, 8 pianoforte trio parties, 4 string quartets and 3 string orchestras. The chief results were as follows:

FIRST-PRIZE WINNERS.

On the third day there were nearly two thousand competitors. The schools were divided into numerous sections. In all there were twenty-two entries, and the performances were assessed by four judges, Dr. McNaught, Dr. Somervell, Dr. Percy Buck and Mr. W. H. Leslie working separately and simultaneously. Campsbourne Council Girls' School gained in one section the challenge pianoforte presented by Messrs. Broadwood, and Essendon School in another section a second challenge pianoforte, also presented by Messrs. Broadwood. The Mill Hill Girls' Club gained the first-prize in their class, and the Essendine Choir, Paddington, was first in the Evening Continuation School class. Rowley) was placed first and Totteridge Choral Society (Mr. G. Hooper) second. In the class for large towns within the radius of the scheme, Willesden District Choir (Mr. J. S. Waddell) gained the first place. In the class open to choirs from any place in the United Kingdom, the tests were: Madrigal, 'Sweet honey-sucking bees' (Wilbye), Nos. 1, 2, 3 from the motet 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure' (Bach), and there were entries as follows:

Full details of the School competitions are given in the April issue of the School Music Review.

Although a strong committee was made responsible for the whole promotion of the festival, no one will deny that the success of the scheme is due to the brilliant organizing power of Miss Cecilia Hill.

OAKHAM.

March 2 and 3.

This is a countryside festival promoted by the local gentry, with the Earl of Dysart as president and the Hon. Mrs. Charles Fitzwilliam as secretary. Besides Oakham itself, eighteen of the outlying villages sent contingents in the shape of school choirs, church choirs and choral societies. The event aroused great interest, and it was obvious that the preparation had been earnest and keen. The children's choirs, which occupied the whole of the first day, were tested not only by the performance of prepared pieces, but by voice production and sight-singing exercises. Thirteen schools were represented. Oakham (Mr. J. C. Kernick), Exton C.E. (Mr. Durrant), and Ridlington (Mrs. Sharpe) were first-prize winners. On the second day there were fourteen adult choirs. The tests were:

Adieu, sweet Amarillis Softly fall the shades Willeye .. Hatton Sleep, gentle lady Hymn to the Trinity Tchaikovsky O peaceful night (male voices) ... Flow down, cold rivulet (female voices) ... B. Lunrd-Selly and Burley, a combined village choir (Mr. McClelland) won the madrigal prize; Whissendine and free from ultra-modern extravagancies. It, however.

The Countess of Gainsborough distributed the prizes on the first day, and Lady Ancaster, who herself has just instituted a competition festival at Bourne, performed this duty on the second day. A concert was given on the second evening, at which the prize choirs performed separately as well as together under the baton of Mr. Wing. The soloists were Mr. J. Campbell McInnes and Mr. Wing.

PUDSEY.

March 7.

The annual competition organized by the Mechanics' Institute Glee Society, held as above, was considered the most successful of the series. Only contraltos and tenors were invited in the solo-singing classes. It was courageous to ask the former to sing Gluck's 'Oh, Eurydice' and Hatton's 'The Enchantress,' but eighteen attempted the task, and Miss Towers, of Bradford, won the first place. There were also eighteen tenors to essay 'If with all your hearts' (Mendelssohn) and 'My dreams' (Tosti). Mr. W. Slack, of Sheffield, was the most successful. In the class for mixedvoice choirs, Mr. H. Ball's fine Bradford Vocal Union gave an impressive performance of Elgar's 'Weary wind of the West, but did not succeed so well as the Milnbridge Vocal Society, under Mr. H. Pyson, in their own selection, and in the end Milnbridge gained the first place. Mr. D. W. Evans, of Huddersfield, was the adjudicator.

Notice of the Belfast competitions must be deferred till the May issue.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, March 15.

Felix Weingartner, the new Opera director, has set himself a heavy task: herculean deeds are expected of him before he has fully realized the involved condition of the institution. The numerous friends and admirers of his predecessor, Mahler, sharply criticize him, and also spread unpleasant personal reports respecting him, so that he is severely handicapped.

On February 25 Eugen d'Albert's 'Tiefland' was performed for the first time at the Court Opera, and, judging rom the success of the premiere, it ought to have a long run. The refined though not actually original music is not, however, in keeping with the interesting though unattractive libretto. The rendering of the work under the direction of Capellmeister Schalk was on the whole excellent: Frau Gutheil Schoder's impersonation of Marta deserves praise, while Herr Schmedes sang the music of the shepherd Pedro, with fervour. The other rôles were well represented by Fräulein Kinrina and Herren Mayr and Moser. For the revival of two old ballets, 'Rococo' and 'Robert and Bertrand,' Weingartner earned slender thanks.

The novelty at the Volksoper yesterday was Siegfried Wagner's 'Sternengebot.' Its performance was naturally one of the sensations of the season, especially as the composer himself was present. This resulted in a favourable reception of the work, for a Viennese audience tempers justice with To a poor and unsatisfactory libretto, kindly feeling. Siegfried Wagner has written music which on the whole Stegified Wagner has written music which on the whole sounds well and shows refined workmanship; it however lacks strong individuality and melodic power. A careful, if not striking rende, ing of the work was given under the direction of Capellme'ster Gille. Frau Drill-Oridge and Herren Lassmann, Ho, bauer, Anton and Nordmann made the most of their respective parts.

Weingartner's compositions, almost unknown here, are Weingartner's compositions, atmost unknown nerge, are naturally creating much interest. Ambitious singers especially are zealously endeavouring to make known his numerous and very pleasing songs. Also his second Symphony in D was recently performed at the Concert Society, under the direction of F. Löwe, for the first ting in the singular and the concert in classical form, is releasing and Vienna. The work, cast in classical form, is pleasing nd character, and frequently shows the influence of Beethoven, Liszt, or Bruckner. A symphonic poem, 'Wieland der Schmied,' by von Hausegger, met with a doubtful reception, and a series of pretentious compositions, which Max Schillings himself conducted at an 'Academie' concert, created a by no means favourable impression. Viennese amateurs are growing weary of overladen effects, and of the empty speech of the iconoclasts, and long for music which pleases the ear and touches the heart.

The arrangements made to honour in worthy manner the memory of Richard Wagner met with hearty response. Admirable performances were given of the independent orchestral works and excerpts from the music-dramas; unfortunately, however, there was exuberant and much unnecessary speech-making.

The concert storm which broke out at the beginning of the season still rages. Of violinists, Ysaye and Henri Marteau have achieved the greatest success. Of planists there may be specially named Godowski and Rosenthal, and, in the department of chamber-music, the Sevcík and Trieste Quartets. A quartet by Dohnanyi met with well-deserved success. Master-singer Johannes Messchaert, who gave a vocal recital, drew a crowded house.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The sixth of the Queen's College chamber concerts, on February 29, was devoted exclusively to the music of Beethoven. Miss A. C. Kemp was the vocalist, and, amongst other pieces, sang two Scotch and one Irish song with pianoforte, violin and violoncello accompaniment. accompaniments are so seldom heard that their performance was interesting, although it cannot be said that the arrangements are worthy of their great author. The Verbrugghen Quartet played the Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3), and in conjunction with Messrs. Fred Cole, R. D. W. Haffie, Charles Borwick and E. Angles, gave an excellent rendering of the Septet.

The Philharmonic Society's season was brought to a close on March 13, by a concert occupied entirely with selections from Wagner's 'Meistersingers.' The parts chosen were portions of Act II. and the greater part of Act III. The solo singers were Miss Gleeson-White and Messrs. Pembroke (Walther), M. Vincent (Sachs) and W. Dever (Beckmesser). The chorus and orchestra acquitted themselves very creditably, although the difficulties are really great when a work so unusual and complicated is attempted by performers who are mostly amateurs. It certainly required the combination of knowledge and perseverance which are so characteristic of Dr. F. Koeller, the Society's conductor, to justify the attempt and crown it with success.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The sixth concert of the Birmingham Orchestral Concert Society took place in the Town Hall on February 19, and was conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, the executive being the Hallé Orchestra, supplemented by a contingent of local players. of harked ability, was the solo pianist.

The last Harrison Concert of the present series was given in the Town Hall on March 7. The London Symphony Orchestra was conducted by Herr Arthur Nikisch, who made his début in Birmingham. The programme comprised the 'Pathetic' symphony, and the 'Leonora' No. 3 and 'Tannhäuser' overtures. Herr Nikisch created an extraordinary sensation, especially in his interpretation of the 'Pathetic' symphony. Mr. Edouard Risler gave a finished and artistic performance of Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in G, introducing Hans von Bülow's difficult cadenzas.

The Midland Musical Society was well advised in reviving Sir Edward Elgar's cantata 'King Olaf,' first heard at the North Staffordshire Musical Festival in October, 1896. It is a work of great dramatic power and melodic beauty, a veritable tone-picture in which each character stands out in bold relief. The performance given in the Town Hall on February 22, was to be ranked among the best achievements yet attained by this Society since Mr. A. J. Cotton undertook the conductorship. The choral portions were splendidly sung by the choir, and the orchestra discharged its arduous task most skilfully. The whole rendering was greatly enhanced by the valuable aid of the soloists, Miss May Lund, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Joseph Farrington.

The forty-second annual concert promoted by the Birmingham Police, in aid of the fund to enable the Police Band to perform in the public parks of the city, was given in the Town Hall on March 11, before a crowded audience, when some capital selections of music were played under bandmaster Sergeant Henry Cannon's conductorship. while Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ.

For the first time here as a concert performance, the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association gave a recital of Benedict's opera 'The Lily of Killarney' in the Town Hall, on March 14. Mr. Joseph H. Adams, the conductor, had evidently correctly gauged the taste of his patrons, for the Town Hall was crowded. The choir did well, and the principals were Miss Annie Nelson, Madame McEwan Johnson, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. Edward Arthur, Mr. Clarance Savage, Mr. Thomas Howell and Mr. Tom

The Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society's concert which took place at the Agricultural Hall on February 21, was entirely devoted to Wagner. The singing of the choir, especially in the choral march from 'Tannhauser,' was resonant and convincing, while the orchestra showed perfect familiarity with Wagner's scores. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. James Davies, Miss Hattie Molineaux and Mr. Montague Borwell. Mr. H. Lyell Taylor conducted.

Mr. W. Berridge Hicks conducted a praiseworthy performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Weddingfeast' and 'Death of Minnehaha,' given by the Moseley Choral Society at the Moseley and Balsall Heath Institute on March 19. The band and choir numbered 120 performers, and the excellent principals were Miss Gertrude Yates, Mr. Edwin Spooner and Mr. G. Neale Peck.

The Shirley Institute Choral Society gave a successful concert on March 21 at the Institute, the principal works performed being Stainer's 'The daughter of Jairus' and Anderton's 'The wreck of the Hesperus.' The executive consisted of a band and chorus of sixty performers, conducted by Mr. Frank Glassey, and the principals were Mrs. Graham Barber, Mr. Clarence Skelton and Mr. Leslie Bailey. Miss Edith Ball was the pianist and Mr. Spurman the organist.

The Sarum Choral Society celebrated its 'Diamond jubilee' on March 3 by giving a performance of 'Elijah.' Under the conductorship of Mr. A. E. The Ladies' Night of the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee The Ladies' Night of the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society, on February 28, was highly successful, Colston Hall being crowded, and the performance of a more than usually interesting character. The pieces which were given by the choir for the first time upon this occasion were 'The Rose' (Gade), 'Dance of Gnomes' (MacDowell), 'Love's slumber song' (Lovatt) and 'Hymn to the Sun' (De Rillé). Of these, MacDowell's production proved a greeial favourity. MacDowell's production proved a special favourite. Some of the familiar compositions were given with Mr. Charles Knowles as the soloist, viz.: 'Tears of anguish' (Reichardt), 'Cold is Cadwallo's tongue' (Horsley) and 'Thou art my dream' (Metzger). Weber's 'Der Freischütz' overture, the Introduction to Acts I. and III. of 'Lohengrin,' discovered 'Viennese Dances' by Beethoven, and Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture, were all played with spirit and unanimity. In a composition by Boellmann, a solo for the violoncello with variations, Mr. Percy Lewis, exemplified great skill. In the Romance and Gavotte from Raff's Suite in E flat (Op. 200), Mr. G. Herbert Riseley played the pignoforte part, being ably accompanied by played the pianoforte part, being ably accompanied by the band. The vocalists were Miss Katharine Gerrish and Miss Gertrude Winchester, both of whom exerted themselves to good purpose. Mr. George Riseley occupied his accustomed place as conductor.

The annual concert given by the Cathedral School Choir on March 3, at Rediand Park Hall, was in aid of the Children's Help Society and the Home for Crippled Children. Mr. A. E. number of part-songs.

The spacious room at Bristol Grammar School was crowded on March 11, when Mr. C. W. Stear, music-master and organist of the Church of the Holy Nativity, gave an organ recital. Mr. Percy Bennett contributed two oboe solos, and Mr. Herbert Spiller, bass soloist at St. Thomas's

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

Mr. Hatton Malcolm's male-voice choir gave a highly interesting concert on February 25. No English glee-composer found a place in the fourteen choral numbers forming the programme, the composers drawn upon being chiefly German, Russian, French and Norwegian; nothing but praise can be bestowed on the performance, but why were native composers thus ignored? Vocal solos were given by Mr. Charles Tree and Mr. George Inglis, and Mr. J. Crossland Hirst acted as accompanist. On the following evening the Musical Association connected with St. Matthew's United Free Church gave a good rendering of Handel's 'Samson.' Mr. J. H. Baxter conducted, and Mr. J. K. Findlay played the organ accompaniments. The annual concert of the Glasgow University Choral Society (Mr. A. M. Henderson, conductor) took place on March 4, when, both with respect to programme and performance, the students showed a marked advance on their former efforts. The rendering of Palestrina's 'O bone Jesu,' Arcadelt's 'Ave Maria,' and Elgar's 'How calmly the evening' calls for special mention, but the various other numbers on the programme, which included some 16th century madrigals, Stanford's 'Songs of the sea,' and part-songs by Smart and Arthur Foote, were also sung quite creditably. Rheinberger's Pianoforte quartet in E flat and instrumental solos by Miss Bessie Spence (violin), Professor Bower (violoncello), and Mr. A. M. Henderson (pianoforte) gave necessary variety to the programme, and the accompaniments were carefully played by Mr. W. F. Foresth

The Orpheus Choir, a comparatively new organization conducted by Mr. Hugh S. Roberton, gave two concerts on March 10 and 11, and revealed excellences which place the Choir among the best of its kind in the city. The programme was very varied in its character, but every item was sung with fine tone and excellent phrasing and expression. The presence of Madame Suzanne Adams as solo vocalists helped to secure a large audience. The other solo vocalists were Master Sydney Collet and Mr. Harry Dearth. The duties of organist and accompanist were very ably discharged by Mr. A. J. Lancashire.

The efforts of the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society to popularise chawber music in the southern suburbs of the city have been attended with much success this season. Three concerts were given—on March 2, 9, and 16—the performers being the Verbrugghen Quartet, a combination that stands for everything that is best in ensemble playing, assisted by Misses J. Cullen and C. E. C. Brown (violin), Mr. R. Daeblitz (viola), Mr. G. Bruce (violoncello), Mr. F. Cole (double-bass), and Misses A. Cullen and Hilda Bailey (pianoforte). The programmes have included String quartets by Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert, in addition to Mendelssohn's Octet for strings, Schubert's quintet 'The trout,' and Beethoven's quintet 'The storm.'

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, ably directed by Mr. W. T. Hoeck, gave its second concert on March 19. The most successful item in the programme was Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture, which was played with great crispness, but the rendering of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto and Beethoven's C minor Symphony was quite praiseworthy. The solo part in the concerto was played by Miss R. K. Graham, a young local lady who has studied with Professor Sevcik, and on this occasion made her first public appearance in Glasgow. Mr. Hamilton Harris as vocalist made an excellent impression, his fine sonorous bass voice and admirable method being exhibited in songs by Purcell and Mozart. Clydebank Choral Union, under Mr. W. J. Clapperton, performed 'Elijah' on March 18, the same oratorio being given by the Greenock Choral Union on March 18, the same oratorio being given by the Greenock Choral Union on March 20.

The month's music-makings have been varied by the visit of the Moody-Manners and the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Companies, the former giving a revival of Halèvy's 'The Jewess,' and the latter of Verdi's 'Othello' and Goring Thomas's Esmeralda.' Amateur opera has been represented by the Glasgow College of Music Operatic Society in Cellier's 'The Mountebanks,' and the Glasgow Amateur Operatic Society in Sullivan's 'Iolanthe,' both performances being given in the cause of charity.

The second concert of the season of the Gloucester Choral Society was held in the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on Choral Society was held in the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on February 25, when the efforts of the members and the conductor, Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, were rewarded by a large audience. Haydn's 'Spring' was successfully sung, the solos being taken by Madame Alice Prowse, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. William Higley. The rollicking music of Cowen's 'John Gilpin' was also splendidly rendered. The band, led by Mr. W. H. Reed, tastefully played Elgar's Serenade for strings in E (Op. 20), and the rest of the programme was devoted to miscellaneous songs by the vocalists above named. the vocalists above named.

The series of free musical recitals which have been held in Gloucester Cathedral during the winter came to an end on March 5. A novelty at the last recital was a small orchestra.

The series has been very largely attended.

viola player in the quartet party.

A new string quartet, which is led by Mr. C. Rawdon Briggs, leader of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and includes Mr. J. S. Bridge, Mrs. Rawdon Briggs (viola), and Mr. Walter Hatton, made a successful début at a concert given in the Yamen Rooms on February 28. Their playing of Schumann's A minor Quartet and Dvorák's Quintet—in which they were joined by Mr. Max Mayer at the pianoforte—was marked not only by technical skill and finish, but also by musicianly insight. Similar commendable features were noticeable in the vocal items contributed by Mr. Horatio Connell, a baritone whose interpretation of songs by Hugo Wolf, Brahms, Grieg and Max Mayer made a marked impression, especially in the musicianly songs by the last-named composer, who accompanied admirably.

An interesting lecture on the evolution of the string quartet was given on March 5 by Mr. Herbert McCullagh, who is an able writer of concert annotations. He divided his subject into three periods—the Classical, Romantic, and Modern. The illustrations were played by a string quartet consisting of Messrs. Nevison, H. Bantock, Cropper and Dovey. The occasion was the last of the Corporation free lectures in the Picton Hall, four only of which have been on musical subjects out of a total of thirty, a proportion which needs revision.

Sir Charles Santley spent his seventy-fourth birthday in his native town, and one agreeable feature of the day was the presentation to him by the boys of the Liverpool Institute, his old school, of a silver bowl suitably inscribed. In addition to making a speech, Sir Charles sang 'O ruddier than the cherry,' 'The rosary,' 'To Anthea,' and 'Simon the cellarer.'

The Birkenhead Glee and Madrigal Society—a fine combination of male voices, which has an alert and capable conductor in Mr. Arthur Speed-gave a successful concert on February 22. The programme included several items sung with spirit and finish, notably Mendelssohn's 'The Word went forth,' 'Night winds' (Calkin), 'Thor's war song' (Maunder), and Sullivan's 'Beleaguered.' Mr. John Lawson contributed Vieuxtemps's 'Fantasie Caprice' and other cleverly-played violin solos, and Miss Leonora Sparkes and Captain Oakshott were the vocalists vocalists.

At the tenth concert of the Philharmonic Society on February 25, the band was augmented to 101 players, including 66 strings, 27 wood-wind and brass, 2 harps, and 6 drums, &c., a splendid array, conducted by Dr. Cowen in a fine performance of Brahms's second Symphony, Dvorák's 'Carneval' Overture,' Humperdinck's 'Sandinan's song' and 'Evening blessing,' and Beethoven's ballet music from 'Prometheus.' The vocalist was Mr. Edouard de Reszke. The programme of the eleventh concert, on March 10, commenced with Landon Ronald's inspiriting and clever overture 'A birthday,' and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 1, in G minor (Op. 13), was also heard for the first time here. Emmanuel Moor's Violoncello concerto No. 2, in C sharp minor, was played by Señor Pablo Casals, and the vocalist was Miss Elena Gerhardt.

Thanks are due to Mr. Granville Bantock for a first performance by the Orchestral Society, on February 29, of the Suite by Sibelius, 'Belshazzar's feast,' and Hugo Wolf's 'Italian' Serenade, which is a melodious quasi-waltz movement presenting no problems. In four movements, the Sibelius Suite is noticeable for its Eastern suggestiveness, and reveals the composer in quite a new aspect. Another novelty was a saxophone solo cleverly played by Mr. E. Mills. Mozart's Symphony in D (Köchel 385) completed the scheme. Mr. Ashbridge Miller was the vocalist and

Mr. Eric Chapman the accompanist.

The first visit here of Herr Arthur Nikisch, accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra, led by Mr. Arthur Payne, drew a very large and delighted audience to the fourth and final Harrison concert on March 11. A particularly suggestive and finished performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony followed the 'Leonora' (No. 3) overture, and, with the 'Tannhäuser' overture and other Quartet (Op. 41, No. 2) was very agreeably played, and an interesting programme was completed by Brahms's Pianoforte quintet (Op. 35), in which Miss Evelyn Suart was associated items, was listened to with keen attention and unmistakable

At the fifth ladies' concert of the Orchestral Society, on March 21, Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted a fine performance of Schubert's C major Symphony. Other items, conducted by Mr. Granville Bantock, included Debussy's Prelude 'l'Après-midi d'un faune,' Rutland Boughton's Fantasie 'Love and Spring,' and 'March for a Pageant' (Ernest Austin). Mrs. Henry J. Wood sang three songs by Delius and Mr. Bantock's air 'The wilderness and the solitary place'

Under the direction of Dr. C. T. Reynolds, the Claughton and Oxton Choral Society gave a concert in Birkenhead on March 2, when the programme included Gade's 'Erl King's daughter' (soloists, Miss F. Davies and Mr. E. Davies), and Somervell's Leeds cantata 'The forsaken merman,' two melodious works. The baritone solos in the latter were sung by Mr. E. Davies. The Stewart Ladies' String Quartet, led by Miss Mabel Whipp, were also agreeably heard in Haydn's 'Emperor' variations.

A concert entirely devoted to Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music was given by the Rimmer String Quartet in the Concert Hall, Liscard, on March 17, when the presence and co-operation of the composer gave distinction to the proceedings. With Mr. Coleridge-Taylor at the pianoforte, the programme included the Quartet (Op. 8); five negro melodies for violin, violoncello and pianoforte, and the Quintet for Clarinet (Mr. E. Mills), two violins (Messrs. Stutely and H. Bantock), viola (Mr. Nevison), and violoncello (Mr. Dovey). The vocalist was Miss Edith

The Cymric Vocal Union—a combination of male voices unsurpassed in this district—gave its twenty-fourth annual concert on March 14, assisted by Mr. John Lawson's orchestra. Under the able conductorship of Mr. J. T. Jones, the choir gave an excellent performance of Mr. J. H. Maunder's cantata 'The Martyrs.' The soloists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Ivor Foster.

At the ninth annual conference of the Lancashire sections of the I. S. M. in Liverpool on March 14, Mr. E. de Jong read a paper on 'The Flute, its history and development,' with illustrations by several instruments lent by Dr. Watson, of Manchester. At the same meeting a presentation was made to Mr. W. D. Hall, on the occasion of his departure from Liverpool for London.

At the Hallé concert of February 27 Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra' was performed, and at the concert sprach Zarathustra' was performed, and at the concert of March 5 his 'Don Juan' was given another hearing. Both symphonic poems were well rendered, the latter wonderfully so. The Symphony at the concert of February 20 was Schumann's in E flat—'The Rhenish'—and Dvorák's 'Carneval' overture was also played. Mr. Charles W. Clark was the vocalist. The programmet of the concert on March 5 included Beethoven's eighth Symphony and his C minor Pianoforte concerto (soloist, Mr. Busoni), César Franck's 'Prelude, Aria, and Finale,' and a Schubert-Liszt 'Reiter Marsch.' With the twentieth and last concert, on March 12, Dr. Richter reached the ninth of the Beethoven Symphonies; and of the Scherzo and Adagio movements he secured an incomparably beautiful rendering. Mr. R. H. Wilson's choir had a hard evening's task, for the Choral Symphony was preceded by Bruckner's Te Deum, and Bach's unaccompanied motet, 'The Spirit also helpeth us.' Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. William Higley constituted the quartet for the Beethoven and the Bruckner works

At the last concert of the season of the Gentlemen's Concerts, on March 16, Miss Agnes Nicholls was the vocalist, Mr. Siloti the solo pianist, and Mr. Hamilton Harty the very capable accompanist. The vocalist of the evening contributed eleven songs, achieving perhaps her greatest success in her rendering of the song, in recitatives and airs, 'From rosie bow'rs,' (Purcell's 'Don Quixote'). Mr. Siloti played three Chopin studies—Nos. 7, 13 and 26—the Prelude, No. 15, and the Ballade in A flat. His second group of pieces consisted of the Préludes by Rachmaninoff—Nos. 1, 4 and 5 of Op. 23.—'A Study' (Op. 37), by Liadoff, and Liszt's Rhapsody, No. 12. Two Bach Preludes and Fugues—in B flat minor and D major—and the 'Chromatic' Fantasia and Fugue constituted the third group of pieces. third group of pieces.

The programme of the Brodsky Quartet concert of March 3 contained Beethoven's Serenade for flute, violin, and viola (Op. 25), the same composer's String quartet in E flat (Op. 127), and Bach's Sonata in E for pianoforte and violin. Mr. Edward de Jong, Dr. Brodsky, and Mr. S. Speelman were concerned in a delightful performance of the Serenade, while Mr. Siloti joined Dr. Brodsky in a broad and graceful rendering of the Sonata. The second of the four movements, indeed, had to be repeated.

At the Promenade concert of February 22, Dr. Brodsky played Spohr's Violin concerto No. 9, in C minor, with its ever-popular Adagio; Beethoven's Romance in G, and a Bach Bourrée. Miss Lillie Wormald sang the 'Bell song' from Délibes's 'Lakmé' brilliantly. The three overtures 'Der Freischütz' (Weber), 'Carneval Romain' (Berlioz) and Lustspiel' (Smetana) were extremely well played under Mr. S. Speelman's baton. At the concert of March 7 three further overtures were performed—'Euryanthe,' the 'Fidelio,' and 'Masaniello.' The 'Farewell' Symphony was a concession to lighter tastes; and the slow movement of the members of the orchestra, one by one, from the platform, was managed with quite splendid pianissimo effects. Mr. R. J. Forbes played the first movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in E flat, a Chopin-Liszt 'Chant Polonais,' and an 'Etude de Concert' Schlözer, a name new to us, the study clearly indicating the composer's technical knowledge of the pianoforte. Mr. Hamilton Harris was the vocalist.

The last of Mr. Brand Lane's subscription concerts of the season was given on February 29. Madame Evangeline Florence, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Hamilton Earle (vocalists), Mr. Leon Sametini (violin), and Mr. Percy Grainger (pianoforte) were concerned, with Mr. Lane's Philharmonic Choir, in the execution of a greatly enjoyed miscellaneous programme. Amongst Mr. Grainger's selections was a Stanford-Grainger solo piece, arranged from a march-jig, and entitled 'Irish dance,' which greatly pleased.

A goodly portion of the London Symphony Orchestra were here on March 10, in connection with the season of Harrison concerts. Mr. Arthur Nikisch conducted, and secured remarkably incisive performances of the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, the 'Pathetic' Symphony, the 'Ballet des Sylphes,' the 'Hungarian' March (Berlioz) and the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. Mr. Edouard Risler gave an admirable rendering of Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in G, with the band.

On March 9, Mr. Egon Petri quite triumphantly completed his task of playing twenty of the Beethoven Pianoforte sonatas. At this, his fourth recital, he played the last four of the thirty-two. The Whitworth Hall of the University was again crowded, and at the close of his great effort Mr. Petri was greated with an anthusiastic demonstration Mr. Petri was greeted with an enthusiastic demonstration.

The third French concert, on March 17, proved the most interesting of the series. Mr. Reynaldo Hahn was the composer represented; and his settings of poems by Leconte de Lisle, Verlaine, and Henry de Régnier, exhibited Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and Elgar's 'Variations on an original theme.' Miss Fillunger, a professor at the Royal Manchester College of Music, admirably sang Mozart's 'Dove Sono,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear ye, Israel.' Master Ernst Lengyel deepened the impression his first appearance had created, by his playing of Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte concerto and of the Bach-Liszt Prelude and Fugue in was the most remarkable. Mr. Hahn also contributed to the programme a set of Variations for violoncello and pianoforte (played by Mr. Georges Pitsch and the composer), and some Variations for flute and pianoforte (Mr. Louis Fleury and the composer). The first part of the programme was concerned with earlier French composers—Lully, Ramean, Blavet, Roland Marais and Caix d'Herveloix.

On March 11 the South Shields Orchestral Society gave, among other items at its annual concert, Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' Symphony and Beethoven's 'King Stephen' overture. A feature of this Society's work is the amount of attention paid by the conductor, Mr. Albert Adams, to expressive orchestral playing, with the result that its public performances are most praiseworthy.

The Newcastle Vocal Society, at its concert on March 12, showed in Haydn's 'Creation' an advance upon its earlier achievements. Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. G. Davis and Mr. Robert Radford were the soloists. The accompaniments were divided between strings and organ, the latter capably played by Mr. C. H. Moody, of Ripon Cathedral. Mr. J. E. Jeffries conducted.

Subscribers to the Harrison series had an opportunity on March 15 of hearing the London Symphony Orchestra, under the superb conducting of Herr Nikisch. Magnificent renderings of Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture (No. 3) and Tchaikovsky's 'Symphony Pathétique' were, amongst other works, the interesting features of an enjoyable concert.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke appeared at the concert of the Newcastle Musical Society on March 18, and joined Mr. Alfred Wall, Mr. J. Young, Miss Mills, Mr. T. Jeavons and Miss Hetty Page in his clever and complex Sextet in F minor (Op. 33) for pianoforte and strings. The first concert of the term took place in the Town Hall on January 30, under the auspices of the Musical Club, when Lady Hallé appeared as leading violin of a very excellent quartet, and received a hearty welcome after her long absence from this University town. The programme included Beethoven's Quartet in G (Op. 18, No. 2), Brahms's Sonsta in D minor (Op. 108) for pianoforte and violin, most ably rendered by Lady Hallé and Mr. Tovey, and Schumann's delightful Pianoforte quintet in E flat (Op. 44). There was an agreeable element of novelty at a vocal recital given in the Cutlers' Hall, on March 5, by Miss Eva Rich and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Vocal duets for soprano and bass formed the chief features of a well-chosen programme, which included Martin Roeder's 'A lament,' Granville Bantock's 'The return,' Gounod's 'Barcarola,' Hofmann's 'An exchange' and 'Cossack song,' Stanford's 'Is it the wind of the dawn,' 'Dvorák's 'The pledge of love' and 'Parting without sorrow,' four examples from Mozart's operas, and two by Mendelssohn. The cultivated vocal powers of the two singers and the unity of interpretation which characterized all they performed served to make the recital one of the most enjoyable events of the season. Each vocalist also contributed a group of songs. Mr. E. Skinner was the accompanist.

Schubert's Octet was the chief work played at the last chamber concert on March 10. Eight members of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, led by Mr. Maurice Sons, gave an artistic, well-studied performance, to the unbounded delight of the subscribers. Mr. Henry J. Wood joined Mr. Sons and Mr. Jacques Renard in Haydn's Trio No. 4, in E, and he also played, with Mr. Sons, Bach's fine Sonata in E minor.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society maintains the excellent quality of its concerts, one of the most successful of which was given on March 12. 'The Golden Legend' furnished the choristers with an abundance of grateful music, the ladies, who largely predominated numerically, singing particularly well. The 'Evening hymn' was expressively sung, while the epilogue made the customary impressive effect. Dr. Coward conducted.

The Sheffield Choral Union, after suffering some vicissitudes of fortune, has been re-organized, and a new conductor, Mr. Horace Reynolds, appointed. A concert given in Montgomery Hall on March 18 furnished some satisfactory choral results, especially in Rutland Boughton's 'Folk-songs' (choral variations) and Eaton Faning's partsong 'Moonlight.'

The Choral Union of Stafford and Uttoxeter gave the second concert of the season in the Borough Hall, Stafford, on March 10, when the band and chorus numbered 200 per ormers. The leading feature of the concert was a performance of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

The principal soloists were Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. George Uttley, all of whom personned the exacting parts allotted to them with cortspicuous ability. The choir's most successful efforts were in 'Praise to the Holiest in the height,' and in one or two other numbers they attacked the difficult music with commendable confidence.

The concert opened with Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite No. 1. The beauty of the reed instruments in 'Morning' was only exceeded by the refined execution of the strings in 'The death of Rose,' the weird strain running through most of the suite being very effective.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Herr Suck, and the whole participated the highest level of excellence, and the whole performance was under the able conductorship of Mr. Drury.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.) LEEDS.

At the Leeds Bohemian chamber concert on March 4, Stanford's new String quartet, written in memory of his friend Joachim, was played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton. The work made a very marked impression, for in addition to the fine construction and finished workmanship one expects as a matter of course from the composer, there are notes of sincere and deep feeling, especially in the Adagio, which is elegiac in character and strong and virile in expression. As a motto the opening phrase of Joachim's Romance for violin has been taken, and it appears in each movement, not as a mere quotation but as a melody which generates the leading subjects of the work and, consequently, not only adds to its appropriateness but gives it unity. Another personal touch is the appearance, in the course of the Finale, of a figure which many will recognise as the flourish with which Joachim used to try his fingers, and so heralded his appearance on the platform at the 'Pops.' This, like the other quotation, is worked with the web of the music so as to make it an integral part of the work. New to Leeds was also Tanéièw's D minor Quartet, with its masterly set of variations, and a typical Mozart Quartet (in E flat, Köchel No. 428) completed the programme. At the subscription concert on February 25 two young musicians, both connected with Leeds by either birth or parentage, were heard: the brilliant pianist Mr. Frederick Dawson, and Miss Nora McKay, a violinist of considerable technical ability and distinctly musical feeling. Mr. Dawson gave a powerful, dramatic reading of the 'Appassionata' gave a powerful, dramatic reading of the 'Appassionata' sonata; Miss McKay played, among other things, a charming old sonata by Leclair with sympathy and refined taste, and both were heard in Brahms's Sonata in D minor (Op. 108). The singer was that admirable and most polished vocalist, Miss Antonia Dolores. The Municipal polished vocalist, Miss Antonia Dolores. The Municipal Orchestra, on February 29, gave an admirable performance of Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture, playing it with clearness of detail and much point. Two of Tchaikovsky's compositions were in the programme: the powerful 'Francesca da Rimini' Fantasia, and four movements from the first Suite (in D minor). Of particular interest was the appearance of a young pianist of exceptional promise, Miss Ella Child, who, after working under Mr. Fricker, the conductor of these concerts, purposes studying in Vienna. In Liszt's showy and highly effective 'Hungarian' Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra, she showed that she already possesses brilliant execution, great freedom of style and command over the keyboard, while her musical feeling was displayed in Brahms's B minor Rhapsody. The last-named was rather a venturesome choice at a popular Saturday night concert, but one which was justified by the attention of the audience, who actually demanded an 'encore.' Mr. H. Reynolds, the vocalist, showed more ability in his singing of songs than taste in their choice: he has a very fine voice, which deserves employment in worthy material. The last municipal concert of the most uniformly successful season that has yet taken place was on March 21, when a Wagner programme was offered, and attracted the largest audience I have seen at any of these concerts. In addition to some of the more familiar pieces, the early overture, 'Rule, Britannia,' interesting as a fragment of biography rather than for its intrinsic merits, was introduced to Yorkshire, and Mr. Marsden Williams, a local vocalist, sang with considerable force 'Wotan's Abschied.' At the request of members of the I.S.M., who had been holding a meeting at Leeds, two examples of contemporary composers were included, the 'Finlandia' of Sibelius, and Debussy's 'l'Après midi d'un faune,' the latter for the first time in Yorkshire. On March 17 the last of the Musical Evenings was made memorable by being the occasion of Lady Halle's farewell to Leeds. She played Spohr's 'Dramatic' concerto and other pieces with unabated perfection of style. On the next day the Rasch Quartet introduced Brahms's second Quartet and Schubert's String quintet in C, and played both of them admirably. On March 19 Mr. Nikisch created a sensation among local musicians

On February 25, Mr. Lloyd Hartley and Miss Margaret Wishart gave a very pleasant recital of pianoforte and violin music. Mr. Hartley played the 'Waldstein' Sonata thoughtfully and artistically, and joined Miss Wishart in a refined performance of a Sonata by Bach, in A. The vocalist was Miss Exley Smith, a singer with a contralto voice of exceptional power.

BRADFORD.

The Subscription Concert on March 6-the last of the present season—was distinguished by a really memorable performance of Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte concerto, which, like the first and second Symphonies, is apt to be snubbed simply because its successors are so much greater and more characteristic. Mr. Busoni, however, revealed to the fullest possible extent its great beauties, and was so sympathetically seconded by the Hallé Orchestra, under Dr. Richter, that the result will long remain in one's memory. The 'Pathetic' Symphony was finely played under the conductorship of Dr. Richter, whose sane, dignified reading was in striking contrast to the more nervous and feverish interpretation which Nikisch gave in the same room during the following week (on March 12), at one of the Harrison concerts. Both readings were highly artistic and quite within the legitimate bounds set by the music, while in the latter case the London Symphony Orchestra played with that marvellous virtuosity demanded by the conductor, and obtainable only when the repeated performances of a concert tour permit really adequate rehearsal. By a second coincidence the concerto was one of Beethoven's, the Pianoforte concerto in G, the solo part being very neatly and artistically played by Mr. Risler. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra's concert on February 22 included little that was of exceptional interest, but Mr. Allen Gill gave a capital reading of the 'Euryanthe' overture, and the Scherzo from Schubert's great Symphony in C was nicely played. On March 14 the programme was enlivened by Mr. York Bowen's fine performance of the solo part in his own brilliant and performance of the solo part in his own brilliant and interesting Pianoforte concerto in E flat, which went well. The revival of Rubinstein's overture 'Triomphale' was more questionable, since it is a very mechanical pièce d'occasion, interesting only because it anticipates some of the sensational effects of the popular '1812' Overture. On March 10 the Old Choral Society gave a concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust,' under the direction of Mr. Pickles; and on May 20 the Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Cowen, followed with Berliog's version of the under Dr. Cowen, followed with Berlioz's version of the same work, which is certainly the better suited to the concert room. On the former occasion members of the Moody-Manners' Company sang the solo parts, in some cases with almost an excess of dramatic expression, in the latter the principals were Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Alfred Heather, Mr. William Lovell and Mr. Dalton Baker, and the capital performance of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra on this occasion deserves very hearty recognition.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Halifax Choral Society, having given Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman' a year ago, liked it so much that it repeated the work on March 5, with the additional advantage of the composer's appearance as conductor. The result was a greater appreciation of the work, and a highly finished and most sympathetic performance, especially as regards the choir, whose smartness and readiness could hardly have been surpassed. Dr. Davies has matured his reading of the work: he has got it closer and more continuous, and has made its interest much more sustained. The soloists, Mr. Albert Garcia (Everyman), Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Effie Martyn and Mr. John Coates, entered into the spirit of the work, and though the orchestral details were not always quite clear, the result was a thoroughly sympathetic and expressive performance. On March 12 the Halifax Orchestral Society gave a concert, and Mr. Van Dyck conducted very creditable performances of a Haydn symphony, the 'Hebrides,' 'Oberon,' and 'Di Ballo' overtures, and of some of the pieces from Berlioz's 'Faust.'

At the Huddersfield subscription concert on March 3, the pianoforte was charmingly played, and the artistic powers of the individual artists were shown in solos for flute, oboe. clarinet, bassoon and horn. On March 6 the Choral Society conducted by Dr. Coward gave an effective performance of Haydn's 'Creation,' with Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Herbert Brown as principals.

The Hull Symphony Orchestra ended its series of ten matinées on February 27, but gave an extra one on March 18, with the purpose of recouping some of the loss which these most deserving concerts, in spite of their control and the former than been brought about On the former artistic success, have brought about. On the former occasion six pieces from the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music were well played, and were most enjoyable, as was Bizet's first 'L'Arlésienne' Suite. Mr. Wallerstein, as usual, secured great vitality in his readings. At the final concert Haydn's 'Bear' Symphony was played with great spirit, and the programme included the 'Oberon' overture, the 'Lohengrin' Prelude, part of the 'Casse Noisette' suite, and, by way of the red fire accompanying the final tableau, the '1812' Overture. There was a good audience and much enthusiasm, which made it all the more to be deplored that the net result of the season is a considerable deficit.

On March 13 the Hull Philharmonic Society, of which Mr. J. W. Hudson is conductor, gave, among other things, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and revived Gade's musicianly if not very individual 'Ossian' Overture. Mr.

William Higley was the vocalist.

The Keighley Orchestral Society's concert on March II included Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. Miss Mabel Manson was the vocalist, Mr. Fransella played some flute solos, and Mr. Summerscales conducted. The York Symphony Orchestra, on March 2, distinguished itself by introducing to the county, if not to the north of England, the recently-discovered Violin concerto of Mozart. The solo part was very artistically played by an exceptionally gifted young amateur, Miss Leila Willoughby, and the work, which certainly seems characteristic of Mozart, and is indeed of more sustained interest than is the case with many of his compositions, proved most enjoyable. Miss Willoughby also introduced a Suite of three pieces for violin and orchestra by Mr. Noble, the conductor of the Society, well-written and interesting music, which was favourably received. On March 20 the Hunsgate Choral Society was to have given 'King Olaf,' but for some reason changed the work to the first and second parts of 'Hiawatha,' with which they are now familiar, and of which Mr. C. L. Naylor secured a fairly adequate choral performance. Miss Alice Hayes, Mr. Sam Hempsall and Mr. Albert Garcia were the principals.

No ceremony marked the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Wagner. both text and music. The poem is based on a Bohem jan legend.

The opera was given, under Dr. Hans Richter's direction, at Drury Lane, on June 13, 1882, and by the students of the Royal College of Music, under the direction of Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, at Daly's Theatre, on November 30, 1900.—Rehearsals, under the direction of M. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Thomas and several cathedral choristers.

RYE.—A performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' was given by the Choral Society on March 3, in the Monastery. The cantata 'was excellently rendered by choir and orchestra alike, proving the excellent training they had received from Mr. W. Sprigg Walker. Anderton's 'Wreck of the Hesperus' and Costa's 'Dream' were also well given. The soloists were Miss Winifred Dixon, Mr. E. Armitage-Hocking and Mr. A. T. Hinds (vocalists), Miss Tuckett (violin) and Mr. Morton Stephenson (violoncello).

ST. ALBANS.—The Choral and Orchestral classes connected with the St. Albans School of Music gave a concert in the County Hall on February 26, when Hiawatha's 'Wedding-feast' was the prominent feature of the programme. The orchestra, led by Mr. Bernhard Carrodus, played the accompaniments sympathetically, and the choir, which has recently been placed under the direction of Mr. Luttman (the new organist of the cathedral), reflected much credit on his teaching, being subsequently heard to even greater advantage in several part-songs, notably in Dvorák's 'Slavonic cradle song.' The solo in the cantata was sung by Mr. Henry Franckiss. The orchestra also played the overture to Weber's 'Oberon,' conducted by Mr. Carrodus.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The last of a series of four chamber concerts organized by Messrs. Guyer and Leake was given on February 29, at St. Barnabas' Hall, before a crowded audience. The following works have been performed during the season: Pianoforte quintets: Schumann in E flat (Op. 44), Dvorák in A (Op. 81), Rheinberger in C (Op. 114); String quartets: Haydn in D ('The Lark'), and Mozart in C; Mozart's Pianoforte quartet in G minor; Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 5), for pianoforte and violoncello; and Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte trio in A (Op. 26). Traditional songs have been contributed by Miss Mattie Kay and Mr. H. Lankester, and a selection from Dr. Somervell's 'Maud' Cycle was sung by Mr. T. Creegan. The instrumental performers were: Miss Monica Orr and Mr. J. F. Guyer (violins); Mr. E. Spinney (viola); Mr. L. A. Ladbrooke (violoncello); Miss Jeannie Phillips, Miss Ethel Seares, and Mr. George Leake (pianoforte). Arrangements are being made for a second series of these enjoyable and artistic concerts.

STIRLING.—Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Dr. A. H. Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens' were successfully performed by the Choral Society, under the able conductorship of Dr. A. W. Marchant, on February 27. The singing of the choir was marked by good phrasing and expression and clear enunciation, and they received adequate support from the orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Cole. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Maud Santley, Messrs. H. Brearley, Daniel Hill and Albert Garcia. Mr. Longhurst presided at the organ.

STOURBRIDGE.—The Concert Society gave a performance of Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor on March 2. The singing of the choir was intelligent and powerful, and the accompaniments to the cantata were ably interpreted by the orchestra, who also gave a very admirable rendering of the symphony, under the inspiring conductorship of Mr. George Halford. The solo vocalists were Miss Elma Baker, Mr. Joseph Farrington and Mr. Mullings, who gave a highly dramatic interpretation of the tenor part.

SUNNINGDALE.—The first concert of the newly formed Choral and Orchestral Society took place on February 26, when a successful rendering of Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' was given under the direction of Mr. R. Barrett-Watson. The solo vocalists were Miss Florence Griffiths, Miss Esther Telling, Mr. R. Richardson Jones and Dr. Spencer Pearson. The second half of the programme included two part-songs by the choir, 'Come to me, gentle sleep' (Cowen), and 'Woodmen, shepherds, come away' (John E. West).

SWADLINCOTE.—The Harmonic Society gave a successful performance of Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' on March 18. The singing of the choir displayed commendable precision and intelligent expression. There was an efficient orchestra of thirty performers, led by Mr. W. Daltry. The solo vocalists were Miss Lucy Davies, Miss Margaret Prothero, Mr. John Booth and Mr. Harry Reynolds. In the second half of the programme, which was miscellaneous, Mr. Kastner contributed two harp solos. Mr. Walter Jones conducted.

TEWKESBURY.—At the concert of the Philharmonic Society on March 3 the programme consisted chiefly of Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' and Dr. A. H. Brewer's 'Sir Patrick Spens,' which were well performed under the conductorship of Mr. George Watson, and with the assistance of the Tewkesbury Instrumental Society. The solo vocalists were Miss Gill Smith and Mr. Arthur Wynn.

TONYPANDY (RHONDDA.)—The Ebenezer Choral Society gave its eighth annual oratorio concert at the Chapel on March 5 and 7, when Franco Leoni's cantata 'The gate of life' and Handel's 'Alexander's feast' were performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Ida Kahn, Mr. Gwilym Wigley and Mr. David Evans. The orchestra was led by Mr. Arthur Angle, of Cardiff, Mr. W. G. Evans, of Aberdare, presided at the organ, and Mr. W. T. David conducted.

WARWICK.—The Musical Society gave an excellent performance of Coleridge-Taylor's Trilogy 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha,' on February 24 at the Shire Hall. The choir displayed admirable tone and attack throughout, and their spirited rendering of the choral portions reflected much credit on their trainer and conductor, Mr. Alfred Blackall. There was a small orchestra, and the solo vocalists were Madame Siviter, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. James Coleman.

WELBECK.—The Abbey Choir's annual concert took place on March 5. The first part consisted of Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' and 'Hear my Prayer,' with pianoforte (Miss M. Johnson) and harmonium (Mr. A. W. Pitchford) accompaniment, the solos in both works being beautifully sung by Master Brian Williams, of the London College for Choristers. The second part was devoted to part-songs for mixed voices and men's voices by Elgar, German, Abt, Cooke and others, interspersed with violoncello solos played by Miss Dorothy Spencer and tenor solos sung by Mr. John Menzies. Mr. Harry Minchin, organist to the Duke of Portland, conducted.

Wemyss.—The Musical Association concluded the present season, on March 13, with a performance of Gade's 'Erl King's daughter' and a miscellaneous selection. The choir numbered fifty voices, and the orchestra was led by Mr. W. Wilson, the performance reflecting credit on Mr. F. Harper, who made his first appearance here as conductor on this occasion. The solo vocalists were Miss Boyd Steven, Miss E. Cairns and Mr. R. Burnett.

WORTHING.—The Worthing Male-Voice Choir made its first public appearance on February 19 at the Literary Institute, when the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Vintage Song' ('Loreley') and 'The hunter's farewell,' Dudley Buck's 'In absence,' Barnby's 'Sweet and low,' and the Soldiers' Chorus from 'Faust.' These were interspersed with numerous vocal and instrumental solos. The choir sang with spirit, and the concert was ably conducted by Mr. David Davies.

Answers to Correspondents.

J. M. R.—The various notices of successive Handel Festivals which have appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES may serve to set at rest the minds of those who, you say, are sceptical as to the extent of those performances. The only books on the subject are the prospectuses which the Crystal Palace Company issues previous to the Festivals as they periodically recur.

BLACKBERRY.—You will find that Franklin Taylor's 'Selected pianoforte studies' will answer your purpose. See also 'Technique and expression in pianoforte playing' and 'Primer of pianoforte playing' by the same author. Messrs. Novello publish the two works first named (the Studies in separate books at one shilling each), and Messrs. Macmillan the Primer.

H. W. T.—The following little book, published by Mr. Charles Woolhouse, 174, Wardour Street, London, will doubtless meet your requirements: 'A pronouncing pocket-manual of musical terms, together with the elements of notation and condensed biographies of noteworthy musicians,' edited by Dr. Th. Baker, of New York.

W. J. M.—No account of the church you name has appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES, but we are much obliged for the suggestion. Thanks for sending us transcripts of the tunes from the Christian Magazine of 1765. The 'Mr. Bach, composer to her Majesty,' is John Christian Bach, known as the 'English Bach.'

A. H.—The following metronomic rates are suggested for pieces selected for the Associated Board Examinations: Bach, Invention (three parts) in A minor, dotted crotchet = 60; Heller, Arabesque in C (Op. 49, No. 1), minim = 66; Mozart, Sonata in B flat (No. 17), 1st movement, crotchet = 144; Schubert, Moments musicals (Op. 94, No. 6), in A flat, dotted crotchet = 63.

M. P.—The only way to become a professional accompanist is to make the acquaintance of singers who desire such help, and to embrace every opportunity you can of playing at concerts, even gratuitously at first, in order to make yourself known.

A. V.—Bach's Orchestral suite for flute and strings is not arranged for flute and pianoforte. The following pieces by Bach have, however, been transcribed for flute and pianoforte: Aria cantabile in D; Siciliano; Badinerie polonaise, each 15. 6d. net.

Vocalist.—The third part of Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám' has not been published, and it is probably yet to be composed. Messrs. Novello can supply you with pianoforte arrangements of Tchaikovsky's fourth and fifth symphonies.

P. Q.—The organ in Lincoln Cathedral was built by Father Willis. For details see account of the opening of the instrument in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1898, also the illustrated article on Lincoln Cathedral in the issue for May, 1904.

W. I.—You probably mean Gilbert and Sullivan's 'The Yeomen of the Guard.' This opera was produced at the Savoy Theatre on October 3, 1888, and last revived in London on December 8, 1906, also at the Savoy Theatre.

- R. T.—We are afraid that your copy of Bononcini's cantata is not of any intrinsic value. It might be worth something if you could discover that Handel had had some practical acquaintance with the volume.
- F. A. B.—Yes, the words should certainly be sung as printed, even though the syllables should be disjoined, as in 'Disperse, ye gallant men' (Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night ').
- G. E.—Grieg's pianoforte piece 'Wedding procession passing by' speaks for itself. We do not know of 'any book which embodies all the different composers' works.'
- M. K.—We regret that we cannot give the names of agents or suggest an 'advertising bureau' either at home or abroad.
- L. R. A. M.—See the answer to M. K. You should be very careful about purchasing a pianoforte-teaching connection.
- A. G. B.-Mrs. Newmarch has written a booklet on Jean Sibelius: it is published, with a portrait, by Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel.
- I. B.—Dr. E. W. Naylor's book entitled 'Shakespeare and Music' is published by Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.
- W. M. X.—No, neither of the gentlemen you name has received biographical attention in THE MUSICAL TIMES.
- A. G. T.—For information regarding the owners of copyright of the tunes you mention, apply to Messrs. Novello.
- P. G.—The word 'iron' in singing should not be pronounced 'i-urn'; the 'r' should certainly be sounded.

Two correspondents are thanked for the information that the March from Raff's 'Leonore' Symphony has been arranged by H. R. Shelley, and that it is published by G. Schirmer, of New York.

THE CHOIRBOY'S GUIDE

THE CATHEDRAL PSALTER

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

ERNEST NEWTON.

This little book has been compiled mainly for the use of choirboys, and, therefore, nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely necessary for understanding the pointing of the Psalms as arranged in the Cathedral Psalter.

A certain amount of information has been given for the guidance of the Choirmaster, but the principal part of the book consists in the sets of exercises which have been arranged to lead the choirboys, step by step, through the various divisions of syllables that occur in the chanting of the Psalms.

After careful examination of the Cathedral Psalter, it has been found that there are exactly fifteen ways of dividing these syllables.

As the Recitation Notes are well within the compass of Alto, Tenor, and Bass voices, the book can be used with equal advantage by all members of a choir.

Price Ninepence.

TECHNIQUE

EXPRESSION

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et catera.

"Admirably adapted to formulate touch as well as style in this special branch of pianoforte technique."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

FOR THE SEASON OF LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table, 'The Denial,' The Condemnation before Pilate, 'The Mockery on Calvary,' The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

STAFF EDITION. THIRTY-SIXTH TO FORTIETH THOUSAND.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS

A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA

PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ATHENÆUM.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."

LONDON FIGARO.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."

DAILY NEWS,
"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."

REFEREE.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects.

WESTERN TIMES.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"

ITHE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.

"One of the most delightful concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.

"St. Paul's Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of 'Joan of Arc.' The cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charging." charming.

TEWKESBURY REGISTER.

"The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make 'Joan of Arc' what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tewkesbury."

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.

"By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of 'Joan of Arc.' There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred cantata, 'The Holy City,' is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and 'Joan of Arc' has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul's writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a neverfailing resource of melodic invention."

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

"Will further enhance the reputation of the composer of 'The Holy City,' as a writer of bright, melodious, attractive, and musicianly Cantatas."

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, 'Fret not thyself to-day,' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."

THE WESTERN NEWS.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening.

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.

"Proved an unqualified success. . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display." good display.

LEEDS MERCURY.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits... Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."

LIVERPOOL COURIER. "Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.
"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician.... The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIME: S.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE, "Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a bora melodist.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form.

. A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."

TIMES.

It has been revised and, of course, re-scored, but the fact that it bears the Opus No. 1A may indicate that in general planit is to be considered as really belonging to the composer's childhood. It is very easy to see a great many of the little devices by which the man has improved the boy's work; effective harp passages and points of imitation speak to every hearer of 1907 rather than of 1860, but the freshness of the main ideas, the vivacity of contrast in the last movement between the fairies and the giants, and the pretty thought embodied in the section called "Fairy Pipers," breathe of a boytsh imagination. . . The clever "Sun Dance" seems to have walked straight out of Tchaikovsky, and the "Giants" straight out of the "Rheingold"; the resemblance in the former case is no doubt due to the orchestration of the adult composer, but the latter must be another instance of independent invention by two composers.

STANDARD.

STANDARD.

The suite begins with a short overture, and consists of six pieces. The remarkable point about them is that the melodic invention is wonderfully fresh and individual. They are, of course, slight, but in more than one place there is evidence of the skilled musician. Whatever additional effects have been secured by the matured hand and brain of the composer—whose skill in orchestration and colour is one of his chief qualities—the tunes themselves are full of charm and individuality. They show undoubtedly the promise that has been so amply fulfilled by the composer, but they also stand out as among the most fluent and spontaneous melodies that he has ever written.

MORNING POST.

The suite is entitled "The Wand of Youth," and is one of the most charming and graceful efforts imaginable. Dr. Elgar has apparently used only the thematic material of the suite in its early form: its present development and orchestral treatment are that of a master hand. The Elgar of 1869 and the Elgar of to-day harmonise well together. With the adoption of a sane simplicity in the subject-matter, and the same concentration of harmonic power upon such unassuming themes, a perfect style would be provided for the setting to music of a purely child's story like that of "Peter Pan."... The "Sun Dance" and the "Slumber Scene" are particularly distinctive; the one by its rhythmic quaintness, the other by its peculiar appropriateness and the beauty of its orchestration.

DAILY NEWS.

The music of the suite is singularly original, with the exception of an avowed "Old Style" minuet and the Mendelsonnian scherzo manner of the "Sun Dance." The most taking of the six sections is the movement entitled "Fairy Pipers," which has a second subject of haunting beauty. A "Slamber Scene" also foreshadows the Elgar of the "Dorabella" variation in the "Enigma" set. The little suite represents a side of the composer which is not to be detected in his very latest compositions. It rather suggests that he should have long since written a light opera. "The Wand of Youth" may be warmly commended to the attention of conductors of amateur orchestras.

OBSERVER.

Leaving the orchestration—which is the result of the composer's matured powers—out of the question, these pleasing and graceful pieces show a melodic invention truly wonderful for a boy of twelve. . . The "Serenade" and the "Slumber Scene" must be picked out as specially charming and wholly characteristic of the musician who wrote the delicate "Dorabella" variation. These two numbers foreshadow in a remarkable way the gift for pure melody shown in the popular violin piece, "Salut d'Amour," which was one of the first compositions to bring Elgar into prominence.

TRIBUNE.

In Sir Edward Elgar's new suite "The Wand of Youth"—as far as structure and design are concerned, a work in miniature—childlike simplicity and charm march hand in hand with ingenious imagination and consummate knowledge of effect. . . This revised version of one of the composer's earliest works, showing at once the fancy of the boy and the mastery of the man, was excellently played and very well received.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a much more consistent work than one would have expected in the circumstances: some of the movements are full of grace and charm, and all are beautifully scored. The Overture is delightfully fresh and vigorous, and there is piquancy and originality in the "Sun Dance," especially in the orchestration of the latter part: while the final movement, "Giants and Fairies," has a great deal of fancy and fine swing. . . The suite, as a whole, will be a welcome addition to the répertoire.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The work has both the exhilaration and the gravity of childhood, and the numbers make a charming sequence. Those one remembers most affectionately are the "Minuet," which shows the young Elgar already under the influence of Bach; the "Sun Dance," which might be the germ of one of the "Enigna" Variations, Nos. 3 or 4, so typical in their delicate remoteness of the later musician, and "Fairies and Giants" in its fine fantastic pomposity.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The seven short movements are very characteristic of the composer, especially in the fanciful orchestration, which is as happily done as anything of the kind from his pen.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

It is interesting to notice how early the characteristic Elgarian idiom seems to have manifested itself, some of the phrases and melodies of the suite being remarkably similar to those which we have long since become familiar with in the composer's later works—and also how little of it is in any marked degree suggestive of other composers or in any way derivative. Elgar was apparently himself from the beginning.

GLOBE.

The "Serenade," the "Sun Dance," "Fairy Pipers," and the "Slumber Scene" are full of dainty funcies charmingly expressed, and the suite ought to become popular.

YORKSHIRE POST.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The themes possess a significance and, in several instances, a charm that, treated with Sir Edward's present resource, result in a most attractive work that will probably become very popular. It opens with a short and energetic Overture, built up with two well-contrasted themes of vivacious character. This prepares the way for an Andantino, a serenade of happy sentiment also possessing attractive melodies. The next number is a Minuet, written in "the olden style"; it is dainty, and charmingly suggestive of tenderness and courteousness. To this succeeds a "Sun Dance," which is replete with exuberant life. It has three subjects, the third of haunting melodiousness. In the next movement, the music becomes more tranquil. It is headed "Fairy Pipers," and there is written in the score, "Two fairy pipers pass in a boat, and charm them to sleep." . . . The piece is delicately scored, but still more subtle effects are produced in the sixth number, a "Slumber Song," played almost entirely pianissimo, and of fascinating dreaminess. The Finale is headed, "Fairies and Giants." . . . It begins lightly and softly with a rhythmic theme, which, after brief development, is succeeded by another subject equally gay and attractive. The giants' motif is as didactic and heavy as those of the fairies are capricious and captivating, and dramatic interest is thus set up which is deftly handled by the composer until a brilliant Coda brings the suite to an effective conclusion.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The pleasing melodies, the freshness and ingenuity of the treatment, and the many happy thoughts in the scoring will commend it to music-lovers. . . . The breezy and melodious overture, the original, impetuous "Sun Dance," the charming "Serenade," and the fanciful and vigorous finale ("Giants and Fairies") are quite worthy of their author, and show that a great composer can make light music valuable. The suite was received very enthusiastically.

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

These Pianoforte Studies have been highly praised by M. VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN, who has expressed his intention of playing some of them during his Recital Tour in the United States. His testimonial is published with the Work, which consists of Twelve Numbers, specially designed to develop power and skill in the fourth and fifth fingers. The importance of trying to equalize these weaker fingers with the stronger ones is unquestionable, as defective execution is more often traceable to this inequality of the fingers than to any other cause. other cause.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

FRANKI TAYLOR

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (8A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.-STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practics (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (8B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 8A and 8B, and so on.

A SOUL FOR MUSIC.

We all know the pianoforte player with a "fatal" finger dexterity, but without a musical soul. system will make him acceptable to any music lover, but, on the other hand, there are many truly musical "souls" who remain dumb and unprofitable from a lack of "technique," even after much keyboard practice. For such there is now every hope; given fair general health they may all become successful players. Little can be explained here, but by sending to Mr. M. MACDONALD SMITH for his free book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," the technically faulty pianist may learn how others similarly placed have been enabled, as a result of a Postal Course of Lessons in the System, "From Brain to Keyboard," to play in a way they never thought possible.

At the time of his first coming out I had occasion to express my opinion pretty strongly as to his great merits as a concert singer, and now he has blossomed into a Handelian tenor of marked value. PRINCIPAL FESTIVALS

Now Booking for SEASON 1908-9.

"DIE GÖTTERDÄMMERUNG" (Wagner).

The Daily News says:

"Mr. Charles Knowles sang splendidly, and displayed keen histrionic intelligence. . . . As a first performance of the part his Hagen was a remarkable achievement. In a very little time he would become a valuable operatic artist."

The Morning Leader says:
"Mr. Knowles was vocally intensely dramatic, and he suggested forcibly the vindictiveness of Hagen."

The Morning Post says:
"Mr. Charles Knowles did excellent work. His voice told well, and he bore himself fittingly as one whose blood was stubborn and cold."

"Mr. Knowles' Hagen was admirable. He sang the summons to the Gibichungs very sardonically and weightily, and he obviously has great aptitude for the stage."

"Mr. Charles Knowles characterised the sturdiness and relentless purpose of this crafty and grim chief of the Gibichungs with much incisive force of voice and spirited delivery in song."

"Mr. Knowles' clever character-study of Hagen deserves special mention."

The Daily Chronicle says: "Mr. Charles Knowles was a dignified Hagen."

"DAS RHEINGOLD."

The Westminster Gazette says: "Mr. Charles Knowles, the Donner, was excellent."

The Pall Mall Gazette says:
"Donner was enacted by Mr. Charles Knowles, and well done."

The Daily News says:
"Mr. Charles Knowles as Donner sang the music well, and yet lost nothing of the dramatic effect."

The Daily Telegraph says: "Mr. Charles Knowles was a fearsome Donner."

THE "APOSTLES."

The Yorkshire Post says:

"The strongly characterised part of /wdas was given by Mr. Charles Knowles, who sang with power, perhaps almost too incisively in the early scenes, but with great dramatic effect in the scene of his remorse, in which the agony of hopeless despair was strikingly pictured."

The Sheffield Telegraph says: "In his great scene the singer rose to the passion and intensity of the music, which in its particular type of expressiveness and verity has not been equalled in any of Elgar's other works."

"ELIJAH."

"ELIJAH."

The Western Daily Press (Bristol) says:

"Old stagers who have remembrances of great singers in the title rôle of this oratorio can point to what were the signal excellences of Carl Formes, Weiss, Santley, and a few others, and it is pleasant to hear a great vocalist who can infuse individuality into an important part.

Thr. Charles Knowles deserves to have his merits recognised, for his vocalisation was most impressive.

The bulk of the solo work devolved upon him, and he sang like the consummate artist that he is.

The Carmel scene admits of great dramatic energy; and even as in the earlier portion of the work where, during the scene with the widow, he manifested true dignity, so in the controversy with Baal's prophets he sang with great declamatory power, and was in every way equal to the stirring character of the music."

The Bristol Times says:

equal to the stirring character of the music."

The Bristol Times says:

"Mr. Charles Knowles, a frequent visitor to this city, does everything well, and one surely hardly expects a much better exponent of the part of the Prophet. In the dialogues he was sufficiently dramatic; in the Carmel scene he infused much power and pathos into the utterances given to Elijah there; and the impetuous 'Is not his word,' and the impressive 'It is enough,' he sang with admirable results."

RISELEY ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.

The Bristol Mercury says:

"Recalls and encores showed how acceptable were the songs of Mr. Charles Knowles. . . . Mr. Knowles, who is frequently in Bristol nowadays, was in splendid voice and every song was encored. With spirited impressiveness he interpreted Schumann's 'Two Grenadiers,' repeating it in compliance with popular request. He imparted deep fervour into Airlie Dix's 'Egyptian Love Song,' and when recalled was equally felicitous in the rollicking lines of the 'Jolly Old Cavalier.' Later he revelled in the reminiscences of 'My Old Shako' (Trotère), with its rousing refrain, and his charming encore was a new song, 'For my Lassie.'" my Lassie.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 5s. Red Basil and red edges, 7s. 6d. Appendix only, paper cover; 1s.

This Book, which now contains the words of about 2000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a Book of Reference for the Selection of Anthems suitable for special DAYS, SEASONS, OR OCCASIONS, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's Voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of

One Shilling.

RIPON AND ITS MINSTER.

'Except ye Lord keep ye cittie, ye wakeman waketh in vain.' The eighth word of this Biblical quotation suggests a misprint: not so to those who know that the words form the mediæval motto of Standing in the spacious market-place, the visitor sees the altered words of the Psalmist writ large upon the Town Hall of the ancient city. Away back in the 9th century, Ripon enjoyed the favour of Alfred the Great, from whom it received its first incorporation, the government of the city being regulated by a Wakeman, twelve Elders, and These officials are now twenty-four Assistants. represented by the Mayor and Corporation, the change from Wakeman to Mayor having been made three hundred years ago. As bearing upon the antiquity of the place, a complete list of the

THE ARMS OF RIPON.

Wakemen from the year 1400 to 1603 has been preserved, and of the Mayors since the title of Ripon's Chief Magistrate has been changed.

It was the duty of the Wakeman (or Vigilarius) to cause a horn to be blown every night at nine o'clock. After that hour of blasting, 'if any house or shop was robbed before sunrise the next morning, says an old chronicler, 'the sufferer received a compensation for the loss from an annual tax of fourpence, levied upon every inhabitant whose dwelling had but one, and of eightpence where it had two outer doors, from which latter circumstance double danger might be suspected.' Ripon therefore in its ancient days forecasted that insurance against burglary which is so natural a measure of precaution in the 20th century. Although the tax has fallen into disuse, the horn is still blown every night at nine o'clock—first in front of the Mayor's house and then in the marketplace, three blasts at each spot. One of the old horns is still preserved, the Corporation accounts of 1690 containing the following entry of its purchase: 'Paid for a new Horn, vis. viiid.' A photograph of the present horn-blower, who is a to be more in need of spurs than James I., as salaried official appointed by the Corporation, is she had ridden from Bolton on a sorry hack the given in the opposite column.

'As true steel as Ripon rowels' (spurs) is another old saying associated with the city. It 'became proverbial when speaking of a man of intrepidity, honesty, or fidelity.' Ripon was long noted for its manufacture of spurs. Old Ben Jonson, in his 'Staple of News,' observes:

> Why, there's an angel; if my spurs Be not right Rippon.

and Davenant, another 17th century poet, in 'The Witts,' says:

> Whip me with wire, headed with Rowels of Sharpe Ripon Spurs.

In the year 1617 King James I. passed a night in the city on his way to Scotland, when he was presented by the Mayor and Corporation with a gilt bowl and a pair of Ripon spurs of the value of five pounds, 'which,' records a contemporary MS., 'gave such contentment to his Majesty that his Highness did wear the same at his departure from the said town the day following.' But the chief attraction of Ripon is its venerable Minster. It can claim a place in the front rank of English mother-churches, not in size, but in points of interest and antiquity. Viewed from the train as the traveller proceeds north, and crosses the river Ure, the structure has quite a dignified Upon entering the minster, the visitor is struck with the great width of the nave in comparison of the two bays which the Early English builders with its length—133 feet long, 88 feet wide—indeed, Ripon is the fifth widest nave in England, being and if, as may be assumed, the same treatment exceeded only by York, Winchester, Chichester, and St. Paul's. In regard to the height of its nave, Ripon's 94 feet give it a lofty and dignified appearance, an elevation that is only exceeded by York Minster and Westminster Abbey. To this great height is doubtless due the fine and are more or less self-contained, as they acoustical properties of the cathedral. earlier portions of the building, the present minster is to a large extent the work of Archbishop Roger de Pont l'Evêque, who rebuilt the church between the years 1154 and 1181. Of this 12th century structure there now remain the westernmost portions of the nave, half the central tower, the re-created. The minster was a collegiate church and transepts, and the choir. At the west end also a parish church: indeed, at the present time, slab on which are the figures of a man and a lion. Tradition says that the man was an Irish prince who brought back with him from Palestine a lion, the said prince dying at Ripon and being buried in the minster. What became of the lion is not recorded. (See the illustration on p. 294.)

In the region of the central tower is the oldest part of the church, if not the most ancient portion Deferring for the moment reference to the of any English cathedral—the Saxon crypt. This dates from about A.D. 670. At that time St. Wilfrid was abbot of the Benedictine monastery (the minster is named SS. Peter and Wilfrid). After the 7th century Ripon ceased to be a bishopric until 1836, when the see was the four minor canons, in addition to discharging their cathedral duties, are no less efficiently and actively engaged in parochial work.

To return to the Saxon crypt, which breathes the air of old mortality in its subterranean darkness. Here, in the dim light of a candle, is to be seen the famous St. Wilfrid's needle, formed by a long narrow hole in the thick and ancient walls, through which the bodies of many women have been threaded.

BENCH END OF THE MAYOR'S STALL.
(Photograph by the Rev. E. H. Swann.)

The north transept, which stands to day almost as its builders left it, is among the most famous examples of the architecture of the age of Henry II. and Thomas à Becket, when the Early English was developed from the Norman. The fall of the central tower, already referred to, necessitated the rebuilding of a portion of that structure; the southwest pier has not, however, been completed. The choir screen, twelve feet thick, on which stands the organ, dates from c. 1494, and is a fine piece of Perpendicular work (see the illustration on p. 298). The dwarf stone pulpit standing at the north end is doubtless a part of the original screen, although it is perfectly correct where it stands, having been used by the preacher as the procession entered the choir, before dividing, the laity going to the Iesus altar in the nave.

the laity going to the Jesus altar in the nave.

In the choir of Ripon a trio of styles meet the eye of the worshipper. The first three bays on the north are the handiwork of Archbishop Roger (Transitional); the three opposite bays are Perpendicular; the three easternmost bays on the north side are chiefly Decorated, while only two remain on the south side, the one bay between is Transitional and Perpendicular. And yet the result is by no means incongruous—indeed, this part of the church is distinctly pleasing in its As will be seen from the blended beauty. illustration on p. 300, the ancient stall work is most beautiful. These exquisite specimens of 15th century wood-carving 'are surmounted by lofty canopies of elaborate tabernacle - work supported on slender shafts and rising into a forest of crocketed spirelets and pinnacles.'

After the fall of the tower the canopies on the south side were reconstructed in the Jacobean style, with galleries above, but this incongruity was rightly swept away by Sir Gilbert Scott in his restoration (1861-69), and replaced with excellent replicas of 15th century design; thus the eight easternmost canopies are modern. No less elaborate than the stall-work are the carvings on the misereres and bench-ends. The former portray the humorous subjects often found in ecclesiastical seats—two pigs dancing to a bagpipe played by a third pig (see the illustration on p. 294), while the figures at the end of the bishop's throne and mayor's stall (on pp. 296, 297) speak for themselves in their mediæval quaintness. Another humoresque in the choir will be noticed at the junction of the two styles at the capitals of the pillars on the north side, the three heads summing up a congregation as scoffers, cynics, and attentive hearers!

The remaining architectural features can be seen from the illustrations; but reference may briefly be made to an interesting three-storied adjunct to the minster, leading from the south aisle of the choir. At the bottom is a Norman crypt, of which much of the work is of a church which preceded that built by Archbishop Roger. Above this, and level with the floor of the choir aisle, are the chapter house and vestry (c. 1070). The upper storey—68 feet long and 23 feet wide was formerly the Lady-chapel or Lady-loft, which is now the library. Of the seven MSS preserved in this abode of books the most notable is the unique Ripon Psalter. This valuable tome, dating from 1418, contains in an appendix the

Also 4s. 2d. paid to Robert (Wilfrith), from which it appears that his nativity was celebrated on the first Sunday after Lammas Day (August 1), now called 'Wilfrid Sunday.' The greatest treasures among the printed books are two Caxtons—(1) the 'Boecius de Consolacione Philosophie' (complete except the 75th leaf) and (2) 'Book for travellers,' consisting of twenty-five leaves on which are printed French and English phrases in Caxton's smaller type. Both these precious volumes, which are small folio in size, attracted the fancy of Dr. Thomas Frognall Dibdin, Lord Spencer's librarian. Dibdin has left an amusing account, in his 'Decameron,' of the visit he paid to the minster in the hope of taking away the Caxtons, and adding them to Lord Spencer's library, as he did at Lincoln, though he did not succeed at Ripon!

On the blank leaves of a copy of Gerson's 'De consolatione theologie' (1488) are two ballets (temp. Henry VIII.) set to music in three parts, only partly legible. The first is headed 'A ballet of ye deth of ye Cardynall' [Wolsey] and begins:

> By a forest as I can passe I herd a voce rewfully co'plane Now may I mowrn for my tryspasse ffor all my Jowell' er fro' me gane And en' ye voce co'playnd yus Miserere mei deus.

The second, also only partly legible, is 'A lytyll ballet mayde of ye yong dukes gace,' that is Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Richmond and Somerset, a natural son of Henry VIII., who died in 1536. Among the rare liturgical printed books are a 'York Manual' printed by Wynkyn de Worde in 1509, and a 'York Missal,' Rouen, of the year 1517.

The Communion plate is very beautiful. pieces, silver gilt, are temp. Charles II. consist of two large covered cups, two large patens with very graceful canopies, one large wine flagon, all of which have engravings of the minster with Another paten is dated 1746, and a very ornate chalice and paten were given in 1890. There is some beautiful 13th century glass in the westernmost window of the south aisle of the nave, and the south-west tower contains a fine peal of ten bells in the key of E flat.

Matters more strictly musical must now claim our attention, beginning with the organs. quite certain that Ripon possessed an organ in the year 1399, if not earlier; the end of the 14th century may, however, be considered sufficiently ancient as a starting point. An account paid in 1399 for materials used in repairing the organ contains the following items: the leather of two horses' skins for two pairs of new bellows for the organ, 2s. 8d.; two calves' skins and three sheep skins for the same, 1s. 6d.; half a thousand small nails for the same, 8d.; packthread, 3d.; and for one man working on the aforesaid organs, by agreement, 3s. 4d.; drink given to said man, 2d.'! In 1453 the sum of 20s. was paid to 'Will, unto Mr. Willm. Preston, organ maker, the sume of tenne

Wright for work upon the "purpetyle" [choir screen] of the said organ; and to William Wright working on the same six days, 2s. 6d. Also 6d. paid to Richard Carver for "gropyng mensal" [almost certainly the keyboard of the organ] to the same "purpetyle." Also 2s. 4d. for sawing timber for the said work, and 3s. paid for ten planks purchased for the same. Summa, 32s. 7d.'

FINIAL IN FRONT OF THE BISHOP'S THRONE. (Photograph by the Rev. E. H. Swann.)

In 1531 James Demssey received the sum of £4 8s. 4d. 'for making the organ.' A Chapter minute of February 4, 1677, reads:

Agreed by the reverend the Deane and Chapter to give Organmaker, for mending the organs, with the pounds for making the organ in the sd. Collegiate Church, to have five stops such as shall be approved by Mr. Brownhill kingdom. The diapasons of the Great organ were maintain and keep the same organ in good and sufficient condition for the space of three years next after it shall be approved as above allowing the said Mr. Preston five shillings for each time he shall be sent for by the said Deane and Chapter.

The William Preston above referred to was doubtless Preston, of York; and Mr. Sorrell, at that time organist, appears in a Chapter minute two years later—May 31, 1679—thus:

Ordered that Mr. Sorrell have five shillings out of ye fabrick p. ann. for wire and his paines in repairing ye organ, and that Mr. Deane pay him soe much for ye last yeare & charge it in his next audit's accounts.

In 1695 the erection of a new organ was under consideration, a Chapter minute of May 25 in that year reading:

Ordered and agreed that towards the purchasing of a new organ for this church the Deane shall contribute tenne pounds and each Prebendary five pounds and that it shall be left to ye Sub-deane to give what he shall thinke fitting to the same.

Was this the organ said to have been built in 1696 'It was accounted one of the sweetest-toned in the Lewis & Co., to the following specification:

or Mr. Sorrell to be good and sufficient and to uphold, of rich, full, inimitable melody; but there was no swell, and only eighteen stops.' Another Chapter minute (May 29, 1708) must be quoted as showing that Ripon's organist early in the 18th century was something of an organ builder:

> Whereas the organ of this church hath been much damaged occasioned by the fall of the Trumpett stop amongst the other small pipes, which hath been repaired by Mr. Thomas Preston, the organist, for which the Chapter is well satisfyed that he deserves the sume of Tenne pounds which sume is therefore ordered to be paid to him as followeth, viz., five pounds part thereof at Martainemasse next, and five pounds the remainder so soone as the same can be spaired out of the fabrick money.

> One of the Dallams appeared on the scene in 1719, and in 1789 Donaldson, of York, added one stop to the existing instrument 'at the expence of Dr. Edmund Ayrton, of the King's Chapel Royal.' Dr. Ayrton, by the way, was a native of Ripon. A new organ was built, or the old one remodelled, by Booth, of Leeds, in 1833, or in 1834, of which no particulars are available.

In 1878 the present beautiful instrument, in a case designed by Sir Gilbert Scott-very poor in comparison with the magnificent cases of some by Gerard Smith? Walbran says of this instrument: old cathedral organs—was erected by Messrs. T. C.

Tubular pneumatic action to manuals and drawstops was added by Messrs. Hill & Son in 1902, and electro-pneumatic action to the pedal organ by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison in 1907. Three Speight hydraulic engines, situated in a chamber under the groining of the south choir aisle, supply the wind pressures.

The whole of the manual work is placed on the rood screen. The Pedal organ is divided, and situated in the second bay of the choir, immediately behind the stalls. The console, facing north, is on the south side of the screen, and enables the organist to command both nave and choir services. The engines are so noisy in their working that devotional fervour would be greatly enhanced if the blowing apparatus could be removed to the crypt.

A curiosity exists at Ripon in the form of a well-carved hand which projects from the front of the rounded organ-gallery on the east side of the instrument. This hand, which can be mechanically moved up and down by the foot of the organist, served the purpose of a time-beater for the choir below. It is probably a relic, and a very interesting one, of the 17th century.

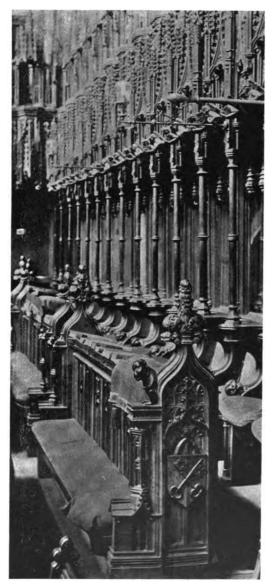

The choir of Ripon Minster consists of twelve choristers, six practising boys, six lay-clerks, and four supernumeraries. Of the choristers four are boarders, the remainder being town boys, all of whom receive their education at Jepson's school. As at Salisbury, they wear frills round their necks. The walls of their song-school are

In the long ago the Chapter records tell tales of alcoholic excess on the part of the lay-clerks, or song-men. One Umpleby, after many admonishings, was found to be 'ancient' or 'unserviceable' (!), whereupon it was decided to reduce his stipend of £8 to £6, and in future to excuse his absence, the remaining \pounds_2 to be 'allowed a deputy.'

Although the first mention of 'organs' at Ripon is of the year 1399, it is not until 1447 that the name of an organist is recorded. In that year Thomas Litster received the 'annual fee' of ten shillings for 'playing on the organs.' In 1478 Laurence Lancaster was paid a similar stipend, but only 3s. 6d. of that amount was for 'playing known Ayrton family, William, William Francis on the organs,' the balance (6s. 6d.) was 'for Morrall, and Thomas, who, apparently in

Coming to the 17th century we find the following names of organists: Wanlass (or Wanless), Wilson -a singing-man appointed to replace Mr. Wanlass because he had become deaf—William Sorrell (already referred to), one Shaw, and John Hawkins. Two Thomas Prestons, father and son, were the chief musicians between 1690 and 1748. The elder Preston is buried in the south transept. Two entries from the Chapter books relating to him deserve quotation:

The first of these Ayrtons—like his brother Edmund of the Chapel Royal, already mentioned—was the son of Edward Ayrton, a barber chirurgeon and Mayor of Ripon, 1760-1. William Ayrton and his son Thomas are both buried under the great east window.

> During forty-four years, from 1829 to 1873, the organistship was held by George Bates (died 1881), to whose memory a brass, on which is engraved his Veni Creator, is placed in the north aisle of the nave of the cathedral. To Mr. Bates succeeded the late Dr. E. J. Crow, who held the post for twenty-nine years, from 1873 to 1902.

Mr. Charles Harry Moody, the present organist and master of the choristers, was born at Dennis Park, Stourbridge, on March 22, 1874. A pupil first of the late Mr. G. W. Bates, organist of Stourbridge Parish Church, he was afterwards articled to Mr. T. Westlake Morgan, late organist of Bangor Cathedral. From Sir John Stainer he received many valuable hints, especially in the important matter of accompanying the choral service, and Sir John, up to the time of his death, took the greatest interest in the career of his young

DOTTED CROTCHET.

GEORGE P. BRIDGETOWER AND THE KREUTZER SONATA.

An element of mystery, and more than an element of interest, surrounds the career of the mulatto violinist so intimately associated with Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata. Let us endeavour to tell this curious life-story, linking up the various incidents with information hitherto unknown.

George Polgreen Bridgetower is said to have been born at Biala, in Poland. The year of his birth may be approximately given as 1779. An official document of identity, dated 'London, 18 July, 1817,' and signed 'Hugh Hammersley,' a member of the banking firm of that name, reads:

I hereby declare that I have known Mr. G. P. Bridgetower for a number of years as the son of Mr. John Frederick Bridgetower & Maria his wife, & I never heard of their having any other children.

As we shall presently see, Bridgetower Senr. was known in England as 'The African Prince,' a designation which hardly accords with his Christian names. And then may not 'Bridgetower' have been an assumed patronymic? Thayer, in his 'Beethoven's Leben' (vol. ii., p. 385) raises this question, and adds 'Whether Bridgetower found his way to Biala and married a German or Polish lady, is all a mystery.' On the other He | hand it is stated (Musical World, December 4, and his organ recitals are much appreciated. Obtained his dark-hued visage, he was a mulatto.

Master Bridgetower studied under Barthélemon Giornovichi, Thomas Attwood, and — Haydn! Where he passed the earliest years of his childhood is unknown, but, assuming the correctness of the statement (to be presently given) that he was a pupil of Haydn, he must have been in the neighbourhood of Vienna before he had completed his tenth year.

Bridgetower did not make his first public appearance in London, as has been stated, but in Paris, at the Concert Spirituel of April 13, 1789. In a transcript of what appears to be the announcement of that music-making, he is thus described:

Instruments:

Mr. Georges Bridgetower - - Violon. (Début de Mr. Georges Bridgetower, né aux colonies anglaises, âgé de 9 ans.

That invaluable French periodical publication, Le Mercure de France, thus records the début of the 'English colonial' in these words:

Un début curieux, & qui a infiniment intéresse, c'est celui de M. Bridge-Tower, jeune Nègre des Colonies, qui a joué plusieurs concertos de violon avec une netteté, une facilité, une exécution & même une sensibilité, qu'il est bien rare de rencontrer dans un âge si tendre (il n'a pas dix ans). Son talent, aussi vrai que précose, est une des meilleures réponses que l'on puisse faire aux Philosophes qui veulent priver ceux de sa Nation & de sa couleur, de la faculté de se distinguer dans les Arts.

In the following month—May 27, 1789—there was announced a 'Concert à la Salle du Panthéon à Paris, donné au bénéfice du jeune G. Bridgetower.'

The young gentleman then crossed the Channel, and, on the authority of his father, we next hear of him at Windsor Castle, playing before King George III. and his Court. Bath, then the fashionable rendezvous of 'The Quality,' is where we can next trace the child fiddler and his paternal relative. In the Morning Post of November 25, 1789, under 'Bath,' we gain the following curious information: 'Amongst those added to the Sunday promenade [i.e., along the South Parade] were the African Prince in the Turkish attire. The son of this African Prince has been celebrated as a very accomplished musician.' Why that dusky African should don 'Turkish attire' as his 'Sunday best' is not quite obvious, unless he wanted to make an advertisement impression in favour of his violinist son. Another extract from the Morning Post of December 8, 1789, may also be given:

BATH.

The young African Prince, whose musical talents have been so much celebrated, had a more crowded and splendid concert on Saturday morning than has ever been known in this place. There were upwards of five hundred and fifty persons present, and they were gratified by such skill on the violin as created general astonishment, as well as pleasure. Rauzzini was enraptured, and declared that he had never heard such execution before, even from his friend La Motte, who was, he thought, much inferior to this minded Britons.

wonderful boy. The father was in the gallery, and so affected by the applause bestowed on his son, that tears of pleasure and gratitude flowed in profusion. The profits were estimated at two hundred guineas, many persons having given five guineas for each ticket.

The Bath newspapers of the day furnish us with some interesting information concerning the English début of Master Bridgetower. His first concert is announced thus in the Bath Chronicle of December 3, 1789:

AT THE NEW ASSEMBLY ROOMS.

For the Benefit of Master George Augustus Frederick Bridgtower, a youth of Ten Years old, Pupil of the celebrated HAYDN.

On Saturday morning next, the 5th of December, will be a GRAND CONCERT of Vocal and Instrumental MUSICK; when Master BRIDGTOWER will develope his talents on the Violin.

Act I. Overture. Haydn.—Song, Miss Cantelo.— Quartetto, Pleyel.—Song, Mr. Harrison.—Concerto Violin, Master Bridgtower, Viotti.

Act II. Concerto Piano Forte, Mrs. Miles (late Miss Guest). Song, Mr. Harrison.—Concerto Violin, Master Bridgtower, Giornowich.—Song, Miss Cantelo.—Full Piece.

To begin precisely at Twelve o'Clock.

Tickets 5s. each, to be had at the New Assembly-Rooms, Pump Room, Lintern's Musick Shop, at the Libraries, and of Mr. Bridgtower, at Mr. Phillips's, No. 10, Duke Street.

It will be observed that the boy's christian names as above given are the same as those of the then Prince of Wales, afterwards King George IV. Whether this was part of an advertising trick, or for some other reason, the use, on this début occasion, of that royal combination of names is somewhat of a mystery. The concert was noticed in the following terms:

The amateurs of music in this city received on Saturday last at the New Rooms the highest treat imaginable from the exquisite performance of Master Bridgtower, whose taste and execution on the violin is equal, perhaps superior, to the best professor of the present or any former day. The Concert Room, Recesses and Gallery were thronged with the very best of company, and scores went away without being able to procure a hearing. Those who had that happiness were enraptured with the astonishing abilities of this wonderful child—for he is but ten years old. He is a mulatto, the grandson (sic), it is said, of an African Prince. The greatest attention and respect was paid by the nobility and gentry present to his elegant Father, who is one of the most accomplished men in Europe, conversing with fluency and charming address in its several languages.

A correspondent observes, that he hopes whilst every attention is paid to the extraordinary merits of the above phenomenon, it will not be forgotten that he was invited to this city by Rauzzini, whose attention to the public entertainment on every occasion and whose real goodness and elisinterestedness of heart should meet with an encouragement equal to his deserts.—The Bath Journal, Monday, December 7, 1789.

In the same issue appeared the following 'vote of thanks' from the pen of the 'African Prince':

To the NOBILITY, and GENTRY, Visitors, and Residents of that wonderful city—BATH!

MR. BRIDGTOWER would wish to express his feelings with that Gratitude which is due to Generous and Noble-

The peculiar distinction with which his son and himself have been honoured on this blessed Island—the AZYLE of the unfortunate, and which the poor wandering Strangers from the neighbourhood of the Tropic, have experienced with the purest and sincerest delight.

The Talents of his Son have now been honoured with the gracious approbation of the first Nobility and Gentry of this Kingdom, being his first Performance in Public in Great Britain—excepting before their Majesties at Windsor, and to their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Cumberland. Let Thanks flowing from a heart full of infinite acknowledgments be acceptable to the Ladies, Noblemen, and gentlemen who have so warmly interested themselves in his Favour! His Son, whose little heart is as sensibly touched with the applause his Talents have produced and the liberal encouragement they have received, unites with MR. BRIDGTOWER in this Testimony of Gratitude. Whilst they exist the City of BATH shall be foremost remembered in their Prayers and Praises.

Duke St., No. 10, Saturday Evening, Dec. 5.

In addition to the above concerts, Bridgetower played 'A concerto on the violin between the 2d. and 3d. Acts' of a performance of the 'Messiah' given (at Bath) on Christmas Eve, 1789, for the benefit of Rauzzini. In the meantime the boy had given a concert at Bristol (December 18, 1789) when, according to Felix Farley's Journal, 'he led the band with the coolness and spirit of a Cramer to the astonishment and delight of all present.' He gave a second concert at Bristol on New Year's Day, 1790, which caused some unpleasantness in regard to procedure, the account being too long and involved to be given here.

Having conquered Bath, Master Bridgetower laid siege to London. He made his first appearance in the metropolis at one of the Lenten Oratorio performances, Drury Lane Theatre, February 19, 1790, when he played a solo between parts 1 and 2 of the 'Messiah.' In referring to the Lenten performances of that year, W. T. Parke, the gossiping oboeist, says, in his 'Musical Memoirs': 'Concertos were performed on the oboe by me, and on the violin, for the first time, by Master Bridgtower, son of an African prince, who was attended by his father, habited in the costume of his country [!] The youth displayed considerable ability, and was much applauded.' The following criticisms on the boy's London début appeared in two newspapers of the day:

Sufficient as the Messiah would have been for an high treat, the Managers had provided an additional dish in a Concerto on the Violin by Master Bridgetower son to the African Prince, a youth, as he appeared, not fourteen, but apparently a complete master of the violin; we say, apparently, as it would be arrogantly presumptuous in us to decide on musical abilities.—He gave the utmost satisfaction in his performance, and we imagine the more he is known, he will be more admired.—(Public Advertiser, February 20, 1790)

Master Bridgetower, son to the African Prince, who has lately figured away so much at Bath on the violin, performed a Concerto with great taste and execution; his father dwelt on every note with rapture, and seemed highly gratified by the reiterated plaudits so warmly bestowed on the young Prince.—(London Chronicle, February 20, 1790.)

Later in the season he joined Clement, another violinist prodigy, in giving a concert, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, at the Hanover Square Rooms on June 2. The Abbé Vogler, who was present on that occasion, records that the united ages of the performers in the string quartet were under forty years, the first violin player (Clement) being only eight and a-half and the second violinist, 'Bridgetower from Africa,' ten years old.

At the Handel Commemoration of 1791, held in Westminster Abbey, Bridgetower and Hummel sat on each side of Joah Bates at the organ, when these two boys, clad in scarlet coats, pulled out the stops for him. In the same year we find him among the violinists at the Haydn-Salomon concerts. He appeared at several of the Lenten Oratorios, given at the King's Theatre, in 1792, and on May 28 he played a concerto by Viotti at Barthélemon's concert, the announcements stating that 'Dr. Haydn will preside at the Piano Forte.'

In the following year the boy was engaged to play at a lecture given by Charles Clagget, which is best described from a little book entitled:

'A DISCOURSE ON MUSIC' to be delivered at Mr. Clagget's Attic Concert at the King's Arms, Cornhill, October 31, 1793. On this Evening, various Pieces will be performed, and Songs accompanied on Clagget's Aiuton; or Ever-tuned Organ; an instrument without Pipes, Strings, Glasses, or Bells, which will never require to be Retuned in any Climate. Many pieces will also be performed on HIS PERFECT PIANO FORTE; And it will then be proved, they admit of regular Modulation through Twenty-nine Keys, every one of which are as harmonious as any of the few Keys we have to boast on common Keyed Instruments.

To be had at the King's Arms, Cornhill; and at the Musical Museum, Greek-street, Soho.

Price One Shilling.

In this publication Clagget describes himself as:

Harmonizer of Musical Instruments, Inventor of the Aiuton, or ever tuned Organ, and of the ever tuned Piano Forte, without Strings, of the Royal Teleochordon Stop, for Harpsichords, & Grand Piano Forte, also of the Cromatic Trumpet & French Horn. Constructed to be performed upon the keys in use Major & Minor Without Crooks, or undergoing any Change whatever.

Clagget's 'Night's Entertainment' included a Haydn Quartet, played by 'Master Bridgetower, Atwood Jun., and others,' in addition to the 'Eleventh solo of Corelli on the violin,' played by Master Bridgetower, and accompanied on the Royal Teleochordon. Concerning the latter piece Clagget's little book says:

The eleventh Solo of Corelli, which Master Bridgetower will now perform on the Violin, is composed in E major. It will be accompanied in regular thorough bass on the Teleochordon. Upon common keyed instruments the thorough bass could not be played to more than six bars, although the Solo consists of near five folio pages, nor can they accompany one bar of the first Adagio. This is the true state of our Keyed instruments, and nothing is more easy than to prove that their imperfections are much more numerous than we have this night stated them to be.

Bridgetower seems to have settled down in London more or less as an orchestral player, as in 'A Musical Directory for the year 1794' (a scarce book) we find his name appears thus:

Bridgetower, George, Violin, Ora DL, Abb.—No. 20, Eaton-Street, Pimlico.

the abbreviations standing for 'Oratorios Drury Lane' and 'Abbey Westminster, Grand Performances in.' He was one of the first violinists of the Prince of Wales's private band who divided their time between the Prince's residences in London (Carlton House) and Brighton (the Pavilion).

From letters addressed to him there can be no question that in his prime Bridgetower occupied a good position in London musical circles. That he was on intimate terms with some of the leading musicians of the time is proved by his being addressed as 'My dear George' by Viotti (who held him in the highest esteem), François Cramer, Thomas Attwood and Dr. Charles Hague, Professor of Music at Cambridge University, at whose concerts the mulatto violinist often played. The letters addressed to him by Samuel Wesley and printed in the April issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES (p. 236) show that he was on friendly terms with that distinguished Bach-loving musician; moreover, it is interesting to find that Bridgetower's name is in the list of subscribers to the first English edition, that of Wesley and Horn, of Bach's 'Das wohltemperirte Clavier,' published between the years 1810 and 1813. And has not Wesley left the following appreciation of his friend?

George Bridgetower, whom they used to denominate the African Prince, is justly to be ranked with the very first masters of the violin. He practised much with the celebrated Viotti, and imbibed largely of his bold and spirited style of execution. It was a rich treat for a lover of the instrument to hear him perform the matchless and immortal solos of Sebastian Bach, all of which he perfectly retained in memory and executed with the utmost precision, and without a single error. Indeed, whatever the composition, or whoever the author whose music he undertook to perform, he treated in so perfect and masterly a manner as to yield entire and universal delight and satisfaction to every auditor.—(British Museum, Add. MS. 27,593, f. 109.)

In 1802 Bridgetower obtained leave of absence from the Prince of Wales (afterwards King George IV.) to visit his mother, then residing at Dresden—where he gave concerts on July 24, 1802, and March, 1803—and to take the baths at Teplitz and Carlsbad. His connection with the English Court enabled him to obtain valuable letters of introduction to influential persons abroad, so much so, that at Vienna he had a most brilliant reception among the highest musical circles in the Austrian capital.

'He jumped us einmal, mein li dear fellow'']. during this flighbar.

From Dresden he made his way to Vienna, where he not only enjoyed the friendship of Beethoven, but he induced the master to compose something for his concert. With what result?—the Sonata for pianoforte and violin in A (Op. 47), known the world over as the 'Kreutzer Sonata'

The concert took place in the Augarten, Vienna, at eight o'clock in the morning of probably May 24, 1803 (the exact day cannot be determined). As the time drew near for the concert, Bridgetower became anxious about the new work, the composition of which Beethoven had put off until the eleventh hour. Ferdinand Ries tells us that Beethoven called upon him at half-past four on the morning preceding the concert, and asked him to copy out with all speed the violin part of the first Allegro (his regular copyist being otherwise engaged) of which the pianoforte part was only sketched. The lovely variations were literally finished at the last moment, and Bridgetower had to play his violin part as best he could from the more or less illegible manuscript of the composer. The last movement was ready in good time, as it originally formed the finale of the Sonata in the same key (Op. 30), dedicated to Alexander I., Emperor of Russia.

Bridgetower recorded on his copy of the Sonata a very interesting incident in connection with the first performance of this magnificent work. In Thayer's 'Beethoven's Leben' it is given in a German form, but through the kindness of Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, of New York, the English editor of the new edition of Thayer's book, we are enabled to give the note exactly in Bridgetower's own words. He says:

'When I accompanied him [Beethoven] in this Sonata-concertante at Wien at the repetition of the first part of the Presto, I imitated the flight at the 18th bar of the pianoforte part of this movement thus:

'He jumped up, embraced me, saying, "Noch einmal, mein lieber Bursch" ["Once more, my dear fellow"]. Then he held the open pedal during this flight, the chord of 6 as at the ninth bar.

'Beethoven's expression in the Andante [variations] was so chaste, which always characterized the performance of all his slow movements, that it was unanimously hailed to be repeated twice.

'GEORGE POLGREEN BRIDGETOWER.'

the Sonata for pianoforte and violin in A (Op. 47), dedication of the Sonata is to be found in the known the world over as the 'Kreutzer Sonata.' Musical World of December 4, 1858. In a letter written to the editor by J. W. Thirlwall, a well-known violinist of that time, he says:

In respect to the Kreutzer Sonata, Bridgetower told me, that when it was written, Beethoven and he were constant companions, and on the first copy was a dedication to his friend Bridgetower; but, ere it was published, they had some silly quarrel about a girl, and in consequence Beethoven scratched out the name of Bridgetower and inserted that of Kreutzer—a man whom he had never seen.

In confirmation of the statement that the composer and the mulatto violinist were friends, there are two short letters from Beethoven to Bridgetower couched in the most genial terms, in addition to the letter which we give in facsimile as one of the extra supplements to the present issue. The following is an English translation of a letter of introduction in which it will be observed Beethoven spells his friend's name 'Brischdower'!

To Monsieur Baron Alexandre de Wezlar. At home, March 18th.

Though we have never spoken, I take the liberty of recommending to you the bearer of this note, Mr. Brischdower, a very skilful virtuoso and master of his instrument. He plays his Concertos and Quartets excellently, and I much wish that you would procure him some acquaintances. With Lobkowitz, Fries, and all other distinguished amateurs, he has become acquainted with advantage.

I think it would not be a bad plan were you to take him one evening to Theresa Schönfeld, where, I know many friends are in the habit of going, or to receive him yourself.

I know that you yourself will thank me for having procured you this acquaintance. Good bye, Herr Baron.

Yours obediently,

BEETHOVEN.

In his application to the Vienna police for permission to give his concert, Bridgetower signed his name 'August Bridgetower.' Those who purchased tickets included the British Ambassador (50), Prince Esterhazy (10), Prince Lobkowitz (20), Count Rasomousky (5), Princess Liechtenstein, and others; some of these names will be recognised as among those in Beethoven's aristocratic circle, the total amount realized by the sale of tickets being 1,140 florins. Czerny appears to have been present, as he records that 'Bridgetower played so very extravagantly as to cause laughter,' but as the composer of the pianoforte studies was then a boy of only twelve years of age, his judgment should not be taken too seriously.

Bridgetower returned to London viâ Dresden, his passport (dated July 27, 1803) from the latter place describing him as 'a musician, a native of Biala (Poland), aged twenty-four years, medium height, clean shaven, swarthy complexion, dark brown hair, brown eyes, and straight, rather broad nose.' On May 23, 1805, he gave a concert in London, which was announced thus in the Morning Chronicle of that day:

The violoncellist, 'Mr. F. Bridgtower,' in the above advertisement was doubtless a brother of the subject of this biographical sketch.

For the next few years Bridgetower seems to have lived in London. An important event in his life was the taking of the degree of Bachelor of Music at the University of Cambridge. For this he composed an exercise to words written by F. A. Rawdon, which began:

By faith sublime fair Passiflora steers Her Pilgrimage along this vale of tears, The hopes of Heaven alone her thoughts employ, Christ is her glory, and the Cross her joy.

The exercise was performed, accompanied by a full band, at Great St. Mary's Church, Cambridge, on Commencement Sunday, June 30, 1811, in the presence of the Chancellor of the University, H.R.H. the Duke of Gloucester, then on a visit to Cambridge. The Times of July 2, 1811, in a notice of the doings connected with the royal visit, referred to the 'anthem composed by Mr. Bridgtower, the celebrated violinist, as an exercise for his Bachelor's degree in music,' adding 'The composition was elaborate and rich; and highly accredited to the talents of the Graduate. The trio struck us, particularly, by its beauty; but Master Hawes was not equal to his solo parts.'

In the following year he received a letter dated '2, Duchess Street, April 30, 1812,' from Dr. Crotch, which reads:

MY DEAR SIR,—As I find you are frequently in company with the Prince Regent, could you do me the favor to mention my Oratorio to his R.H., or if that is disagreeable to you would you be so kind as to inform me what is the regular way of proceeding in such cases. It is to be repeated May 26th, and the Patronage of H.R.H. would add much celat to ye business.

I am Dear, Your most sincerely Wm. CROTCH.

The oratorio above referred to is 'Palestine,' produced at the Hanover Square Rooms, April 21, 1812.

Although Bridgetower was not one of the original members or associates of the Philharmonic Society, his name appears in the programme of the fourth concert of the first season (May 3, 1813), as leader of Beethoven's 'Quintett,' his colleagues being evidently moving in aristocratic circles. was probably an Associate, as he was re-admitted to the Society on November 6, 1819, being then married, for Mr. Watts, the Secretary, wrote to him saying that, 'by a vote of the General Meeting [held April 14, 1819] Mrs. Bridgetower is invited to accompany you as usual to the concerts, &c., until the usual forms can be gone through for your re-admission.' He seems to have had a connection with the Professional Society during 1815, an organization which was a short-lived rival to the Philharmonic Society.

1820 to 1843. He was at Rome in 1825 and 1827, of his death as obtained from Somerset House:

We find F. Cramer, Moralt, H. Gattie, and Lindley; at him in London in August, 1843, through a letter the sixth concert (May 31, 1813), he played second addressed to him by Vincent Novello, who signs violin in a Quartet by Mozart. At that time he himself 'your much obliged old pupil and professional admirer'; that Novello studied under Bridgetower is a new biographical fact. John Ella has recorded that he met the mulatto violinist in Vienna in 1845; he was again in London in 1846, and there are letters in the collection of Mr. Edward Speyer which prove that Bridgetower was at St. Cloud, Paris, in 1848.

No biographer has hitherto discovered the date and place of Bridgetower's death, the nearest approach thereto is that 'he is believed to have died in England between 1840 and 1850.' The remaining years of Bridgetower's life were have, however, been able, through a curious chain more or less passed in obscurity. So far as is of clues, to obtain definite information on this known he appears to have lived abroad from about | point. Subjoined is a certified copy of the register

It will be observed that the informant of in South London without success. Bridgetower's death was an illiterate woman who could not write; this will doubtless account for Kensal Green Cemetery, was tried, with the the phonetic spelling of his second name. As the mulatto violinist died in a back street at Peckham, it may be assumed that he had 'come down in the world.' In the year 1860, No. 8, Victory Cottages was apparently known as '8, Norfolk Street,' the name of the occupier being entered in the rate-book as 'Bridge,' without any Christian name. Neither the name of Bridge, nor that of Bridgetower, appears in the Post Office Directory (London Suburbs) of 1860, which contains the names of only three residents in Norfolk Street, all of them tradesmen—a grocer, a beer retailer, and a dairyman.

With regard to the discovery of Bridgetower's place of burial, application was successively great walhalla of literary and musical celebrities, result that the remains were found to be interred there in 'Compartment 9, Vault 39, Catacomb B. (No. 15,780).' The coffin bears the following inscription:

> George Polegreen Bridgetower Esq. Died 29th February, 1860. Aged 78 years.

A few months before his death—on September 10, 1859—Bridgetower made a will in which he bequeathed the whole of his property to a married sister of his late wife, whose maiden name was made to the Superintendents of three cemeteries | Drake. The will was proved on July 3, 1860, by the executor, the testator's friend 'Samuel Appleby, Esq., Solicitor, of 6, Harpur Street, Red Lion Square,' the estate being sworn 'under £1,000.' The will is signed 'G. P. Bridgetower,' but the preamble gives his name as 'George Polgreen Bridgetower, of Peckham,' followed by the words 'being about to go to Paris.' It is more than probable that he inherited some property left by his mother, who died soon after his visit to her in 1803, judging from the following legal notice which appeared in The Times of October 23, 1832:

Notice to Heirs and others-All persons who have any claim on or to Property, amounting to about 800 Saxon Dollars, left by the late Mary Ann Bridgtower, who died at Budissen on the 11th of September, 1807, are hereby directed to make known and prove the same by themselves, or their attornies, at the sittings of the magistrates of the said town, on or before the 12th of March, 1833, or they will forfeit all right and title to the said property-Dated at Budissen, in the kingdom of Saxony, 8th August, 1832. By order of the Sitting Magistrates.

As a composer, Bridgetower is unknown to fame. In the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (art. Bridgetower, vol. i, p. 402, note) it is stated that there are 'some MS. compositions' by him in the British Museum, but this needs correction by substituting the word 'printed' for 'MS.' The chief of these published compositions by Bridgetower is 'Diatonica Armonica for the pianoforte' This work, 'dedicated to his pupils,' consists of forty-one studies, in scale passages, for the instrument. There is also a ballad entitled 'Henry,' which was 'sung by Miss Feron and humbly dedicated with permission to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales,' the said permission having been given in a letter dated 'December 11, 1810.' The song is signed, by the composer, 'G. H. P. Bridgetower,' a form of his name which agrees with that given in the Gentlemen's Magazine of 1811 in connection with the Cambridge event above referred to. Here it may be observed that the various spellings of and discrepancies in Bridgetower's name are puzzling in their variety. In the British Museum are two printed books of 'Minuets. &c., for the violin, mandolin, German flute, and harpsichord, composed by an African,' who may be They are inscribed respectively 'to Bridgetower. his Grace Henry, Duke of Buccleuch,' and to the 'Right Honble. John Lord Montagu, of Boughton.' Three of these dance tune compositions are scored for horns, violins, and basses.

The fresh information contained in the foregoing biographical sketch has largely been obtained through the interesting collection of leters addressed to Bridgetower, and other documents relating to him, now in the possession of Mr. Arthur F. Hill, F.S.A., who has generously and unreservedly placed them at the disposal of the present writer. To him special thanks are also

ROBERT BROWNING.

How the heart of Samuel Wesley would have rejoiced had he lived in this year of grace 1908! Why? Because he would have seen the rich fruition of the Bach-seed he sowed, in season and out of season, a century ago. Here, in the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, we have the satisfaction of recording no fewer than five performances of the great B minor Mass—in London, at a northern suburb of London, Dublin, Leeds, and Newcastle-on-Tyne. Moreover, the work was given twice on December 16 last-in London, and, for the first time in Scotland, at Edinburgh; also at Oxford and Cambridge during the past term, making a total of nine performances within four months in various parts of the United Kingdom.

It should not be forgotten that Wesley was a very practical propagandist of the works of THE MAN, as he designated his great hero. Nearly a hundred years have run their course since he introduced Bach's vocal music into England. It was at Wesley's 'Musical Morning Party,' given at the Hanover Square Rooms on June 3, 1809, that the motet 'Jesu, meine Freude' ('Jesu, Priceless Treasure') was performed, and that within six years of its first publication in Germany. Why the great B minor Mass had to wait till the year 1876 before it received its complete interpretation in this country is a mystery its complete interpretation in this country is a mystery, and, at the same time, a serious reflection on the Bach lovers who came after Wesley. Now we are atoning for this neglect, and performances are sure to be given in places where the sublime strains have not hitherto been heard. To quote from a letter written by Wesley on December 8, 1808, and addressed to Benjamin Jacob, organist of Surrey Chapel: 'Depend on it there is nothing more necessary to render his divine Strains the Chief delight and solace of all truly due for the loan of the only known portrait of harmonized Souls, but an assiduous cultivation of Bridgetower—presented by the mulatto violinist to them.' Perfectly true! A peculiar, not to say unprecedented impasse has arisen in connection with the Lower Rhenish Festival to be held in Düsseldorf at Whitsuntide. From particulars gathered from the local papers and a letter by Dr. Otto Neitzel, the famous critic of the Cologne Gazette, published in the 'Signale für die musikalische Welt, it would seem that the trouble arose, in the first instance, through the Düsseldorf Town Council interfering with the conductor's hitherto undisputed right to be mainly responsible for the arrangement of the programme and selection of the artists. It appears that the Municipality, which owns the concert hall and maintains the orchestra, shared in the profits that, until 1902, had been made in connection with these historic music-makings. The last festival (in 1905), however, resulted in a deficit of £500, and as the Municipality had to share in this as well as in the previous profits, we cannot blame them for proposing to take steps to prevent a repetition of such a loss; but what of the methods adopted to secure this end?

To begin with, the authorities appointed a commission which, totally unknown to the conductor, Professor Julius Buths, took the first steps towards the arrangement of the programme, &c. Directly Professor Buths became aware of this, he sent in his resignation, which, however, the Municipality prevailed upon him to withdraw, in order to avoid a scandal. Nothwithstanding this seeming show of friendly feeling, the commission went a step further, and soon gave the conductor to understand that he would not be permitted to have any voice whatever in the arranging of the programme and the selection of the artists. No self-respecting conductor, least of all one of Professor Buths's eminence, could be expected to submit to such treatment, and his definite resignation of the office of municipal conductor followed as a matter of course. Our readers will sympathise with him when we state that this resignation means the loss of a substantial pension, to which he would soon have become entitled. That the conductor has the sympathy of his choir and of the musical public was most strikingly shown at the last of his Subscription Concerts, at which he performed, for the first time in a concert room, Peter Cornelius's posthumous opera 'Gunlöd,' as completed and orchestrated by W. von Baussnern. The hall was filled to overflowing, and the conductor received ovations at every available opportunity and was overwhelmed with tokens of esteem in the shape of wreaths, flowers, &c. In order that there should be no mistake about the feelings of the choir with regard to this unfortunate affair, that body of enthusiastic singers resolved nem. con. to refuse to participate in the forthcoming festival.

As a capable choir of some 400 singers cannot be 'stamped out of the ground,' it is now questionable whether the festival can take place at all, especially as the first conductor approached with a view to stepping into the breach, Professor Arthur Nikisch, has refused to take the place of Professor Buths. would fain hope that sympathy with his shabbily treated colleague prompted Professor Nikisch's refusal, and that other conductors of note will also side with an artist who has ever had the highest ideals to guide him in his splendid work, and placed Art above mere money. That his policy of art for art's sake, and his most generous consideration of the claims of living composers to a hearing, were a success, is strikingly shown by the fact that the Society which he has in the Passion and in the church cantatas. so long and brilliantly directed has now at its orchestra is the famous Gewandhaus band.

disposal a sum of no less than 80,000 marks (£4,000). And because one festival proved to be a financial failure—partly, no doubt, because the programme was somewhat too modern and unconventional—this typically true artist is, by a bourgeois committee, forced to resign! What would Professor Buths's great predecessors, Mendelssohn and Schumann, have thought of such treatment?

The 25th Heft of the 'Mittheilungen der Mozartsgemeinde' contains a set of pieces prepared by Leopold Mozart for his genius son Wolfgang, and presented to the boy when only six years old. The original manuscript of 176 pages contained 126 little pieces arranged in the form of suites. Over only a few of the numbers is the name of the composer given, among them being Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, Hasse, Telemann, and Gottfried Kirchhoff. The last-named composer, born in the same year as Bach and Handel, studied under Zachau, and became distinguished as a composer of organ music.

An exceptionally interesting Bach Festival will be given at Leipzig on May 16, 17 and 18, in connection with the unveiling of the new Bach monument. The 'Festmotette,' anglice' service, in the Thomaskirche, on the afternoon of May 16 will include two organ works, the Passacaglia in C minor and the Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, as well as the motets 'Jesu meine Freude' and 'Singet dem Herrn ein neues Lied.' In the evening the great Magnificat in D and three cantatas, 'O ewiges Feuer, O Ursprung der Liebe,' 'Mein liebster Jesus ist verloren,' and 'Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern' form the programme. Church musicians will be particularly interested in the festival service at the Thomaskirche on Sunday morning, May 17, when the liturgy will be given exactly as in Bach's time, besides which the cantata 'Es ist euch gut, dass ich hingehe' will be sung. After the service the unveiling of the monument will take place.

The Gewandhaus will be the scene of the Sunday evening concert, when a programme of chamber music will be performed, including the Suite in B minor, for flute and strings; the Sonata in F minor, for violin and pianoforte; three songs from the music book of Anna Magdalena Bach, the Sonata in B minor, for flute and pianoforte; the chamber cantata 'Weichet nur, betrübte Schatten,' and the Sonata in D minor, for violin. On Monday, May 18, the 'St. Matthew' Passion will be given without curtailment at two concerts, the first part in the afternoon and the second in the evening. The conductors are Herr Karl Straube, organist of the Thomaskirche, and Professor Gustav Schreck, cantor of the same historic fane; the performers being Herr Adolf Hamm, of the Münster, Basle, Herr Gustav Knak, of the Christuskirche, Hamburg, and Herr M. G. Fest, of Leipzig (organists), Professor Universitätsmusikdirektor Max Reger (pianist), Universitätsmusikdirektor Max Reger (pianist), Professor Henri Marteau (violinist); Herr Maximilian Schwedler (flautist). The vocalists include Frau Grumbacher de Jong, Fräulein Enna Reichel, Fräulein Maria Philippi, and Herren Ludwig Hess, Arthur van Ewyk and Emil Pinks. The chorus has been formed of the choir of the Thomaskirche, the Bach Choir, and the Leipzig Lehrergesangverein. Professor Max Seiffert, at the pianoforte, will be responsible for the important 'continuo' part both

Dr. H. A. Harding, organist of St. Paul's Church and to the Corporation of Bedford, has been presented with an illuminated album, a silver salver, and a purse containing a cheque for £110, in recognition of his services in fostering the art of music in Bedford, and as a token of 'sincere affection, esteem, and regard.' The presentation—which took place in the Council Chamber on April 11—was made by the Mayor of Bedford (Mr. S. L. Kilpin) on behalf of 360 of his fellow townsmen and townswomen. The proceedings were made additionally felicitous in that this just recognition of 'something attempted, something done' synchronised with Dr. and Mrs. Harding's silver wedding-day! Congratulations to Dr. Harding on such a gratifying recognition of the good work he has done for music in the town of his adoption.

A tablet has been placed on the house, No. 4, Charles Street, St. James's, Bristol. The inscription reads:

> REV. CHARLES WESLEY, M.A. Resided here for twenty-two years. 1749 to 1771. His Hymns are the possession of the Christian Church Born 1707. Died 1788.

It was in this house, of which we gave a photograph in our issue of February, 1907 (p. 92), that the great hymn-writer's distinguished musical son, Samuel Wesley, was born on February 24, 1766. The tablet was unveiled by Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry on April 14, when Charles Wesley's hymn, 'Jesu, Lover of my soul,' was sung by the assembly in the street.

In its choice of a new Chancellor to succeed the late Duke of Devonshire, the University of Cambridge has honoured itself by electing one of its most eminent alumni in the person of Lord Rayleigh. A Senior Wrangler and Smith's Prizeman in 1865, the new Chancellor has greatly distinguished himself as a scientist of world-wide repute, indeed, as President of the Royal Society, he is the first scientist in the In this researchful and experimenting kingdom. connection the acoustics of music have attracted his attention, the outcome being his valuable book on the 'Theory of Sound' (2 vols., 1st edn., 1877-78; 2nd edn., 1896). In the early days of the Musical Association Lord Rayleigh contributed three scientific papers to the Proceedings, their titles and dates being:

On our perception of the direction of a source of sound. (April 3, 1876.)

On the determination of absolute pitch by the common harmonium. (December 2, 1878.)

On the mutual influence of two sounds nearly in unison.

(Same date.)

Lord Rayleigh was almost one of the original members of the Musical Association, his name first appearing in the second volume of the 'Proceedings' (1875-76); for the past twenty years he has been a Vice-President of this learned Society.

Mr. F. Corder, treasurer of the 'Manns Memorial Fund,' asks us to state that as the list of subscriptions will shortly close, he will be glad to receive further contributions thereto 'before it is too late.' Donations should be sent to him at 309, Oxford Street, W.

In the notice (on p. 326) of the concerts given by the 'Société de Concerts d'Instruments Anciens,' mention is made of an interesting work by an unknown composer. The 'Cour des Miracles' was a quarter of Paris in which beggars, thieves, and sham cripples used to congregate, and the fourth movement of the work in question is entitled 'Cortège des Boiteux.' But while by means of syncopation a realistic effect is produced, the music in itself is attractive. Couperin, by the way, has also offered a delightful specimen of 'cripple' music in his 18th Ordre the last number hairs artisted 'Is 18th Ordre, the last number being entitled 'Le Gaillard Boiteux.'

A Schubert festival held at Lille on April 12 and 13 formed the close of the seventeenth season of the concerts there. One of the last requests of the late Maurice Maquet—the founder and conductor of the concerts, and who had zealously rehearsed the music during the winter—was that his wife, who had shared his long labour of love in establishing the concerts, should conduct the Mass in B flat. This she did, and acquitted herself of her task with great skill and commendable enthusiasm.

Die Musikinstrumenten Zeitung recently announced that a bow used by Paganini at his last concert was for sale. M. Charles Malherbe, Archiviste of the Paris Opéra, has written to Le Ménestrel to say that for sale. the bow in question was presented to the Opéra by the heirs of Count Cessole, owner of the bow, who only lent it to the great violinist, and that it is now in the Opéra library.

At a choir concert given in aid of the organ improvement fund of a suburban church, the programme contained the specification of proposed improved organ,' together with a novel bait for catching donations to the said fund. Here it is:

These stops are new, and cost approximately as follows: Clarion, £7 Horn, £15. Voix Celeste, £9.

Harmonic Flute, £6. Forest Flute, £7. Vox Humana, £10.

The name of the donor of any one of these stops, together with a description of the gift, will be recorded upon a plate affixed to the organ front: and the organist shall be expected to play, at all reasonable times, upon a particular stop when required to do so by the donor thereof.

It may be assumed that the 'forest flute' was a wooden stop. During the evening the Vicar was announced to 'discourse upon the Scheme for the Improvement of the Organ.' In so doing he used his own vox humana, doubtless speaking in clarion tones until he came to a full stop.

'Lecture on music' is the heading to the following extract from a Colonial newspaper:

- lectured in the Town Hall last night on musical harmony to a small audience. He said that he had made the most important discovery known to musical harmony. He explained, by means of a harmonium, the difference between ordinary harmony and his own. The latter, it appears, admits of two variations, 'natural' and 'artificial.' He played the Austrian National Hymn once each way.

Played in any way, it would be most interesting to hear this new harmony on a harmonious harmonium.

AN INTERESTING CATALOGUE.

The British Museum authorities deserve commendation for the means they take in making known the treasures committed to their care. It would be easy for them to adopt a laisses faire policy in regard to catalogues, saying, 'Here are our catalogues, consult them as you will.' But even allowing for the assistance which the always courteous officials never fail to render to students, this 'within the walls method,' so to speak, would not help those who cannot always be visiting the Museum. Therefore printed catalogues of the Nation's possessions are invaluable, especially to those engaged in research The latest addition to the series is the Catalogue of Manuscript Music in the British Museum,' printed by 'Order of the Trustees' and compiled by Mr. Augustus Hughes-Hughes, an assistant in the Department of MSS. This substantial tome of 961 pages is devoted entirely to 'Secular vocal music,' just as its predecessor contained all the sacred vocal music (MS.), while a third volume (now in preparation) will catalogue the instrumental music, thus the three volumes will form a most useful set of books of reference.

The classification is alphabetical, the nineteen sections beginning with 'Canons' and ending with 'Trios,' including twelve pages assigned to 'National Music' alphabetically arranged under different countries. Nearly one third of the volume—302 of its 961 pages—is devoted to the two indexes, 'Initial words and titles' and 'Names and subjects.' The comprehensiveness of the latter index is shown in the following entry:

ELEPHANTS. Introduction of, on the stage, 1752.

And here we may remark that the index to this volume is an improvement upon the previous one, a suggestion which we ventured to make in our review of vol. i. (THE MUSICAL TIMES, July, 1906) having been adopted in regard to former owners of the manuscripts.

In a brief notice it would be impossible to refer to a tithe of the interesting things catalogued in this volume, which covers a period of ten centuries and includes the Rota or Round, 'Symer is icumen in' (c. 1226), and sketches of operas and songs made by Arthur Goring Thomas. The handwritings of nearly all the great masters are herein recorded - Beethoven by some of his extraordinary 'sketches'; Handel by some numbers for his opera 'Alceste,' signed 'G. F. Handel' and dated '8 January, 1750,' in addition to a cantata for a treble voice beginning 'Lungi dal mio bel Nume,' and dated 'Roma. Il di 3 di Marzzo, 1708'; Haydn by his opera 'Orlando Paladino,' signed 'di me Giuseppe Haydn, 1782'; Mendelssohn by his enigmatical canon, of which we gave a solution in our issue of April, 1896, p. 233; Schubert by his opera 'Die Verschworenen,' April, 1823; Verdi by his opera 'Attila,' produced in 1846; Wagner by a 'Sketch of the people's chorus (melody and bass only) from Act II. of Rienzi; and Weber by the overture to his opera 'Der Beherrscher der Geister,' with the alternative title 'Ouverture de l'opéra Le Souverain des Esprits.

Except those now in the flesh, native composers are well represented in this interesting catalogue. Here is the earliest known MS. of Richard Edwards's 'In going to my naked bed.' Purcell finds a place in the organ part to his 'Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, 1683,' and there are operas of Bishop and Balfe galore, including the ever-popular 'Bohemian Girl.' Charles Dibdin's 'Table Entertainments' fill five closely printed pages, while John Liptrot Hatton's 'Scribbling Book' contains many sketches of his well-known heard of Signor Scratchimento,' Sir Henry Bishop, its songs and part-songs. In a letter prefixed to the volume, addressed to 'Jas. Couper Esq.' and dated 'Margate, July 5, 1877,' Hatton refers to 'an old scribbling book of mine which I send you as a present it may amuse you, and it will try your eyes should you venture to sit before it at the piano.' Against one song Hatton has written: 'Get this ready at once for Billy.

Samuel Wesley is a name that frequently appears. Among his compositions is a trio for alto, tenor, and bass which is headed: 'Eulogium di Johanne Sebastiano Bach (ab Horatio desumptum).' Curiosity has induced us to look at this manuscript, with the result that we find Wesley has set to music Horace's Ode, No. 12 of Book I., lines 17 to 20. In the original the lines read:

> Unde nil majus generatur ipso, Nec viget quicquam simile aut secundum: Proximos illi tamen occupavit. Pallas honores.

Wesley, however, has substituted 'Handel' for 'Pallas,' which, with 'honores,' forms a little fugal section of his trio, the following being the exposition:

The little piece is in the nature of a joke in praise of his great hero THE MAN (Bach), and at the same time it pays a tribute to the next best (Handel), in order to calm the feelings of the Handelians (the anti-Bachists) of the day. The MS. is dated '29 March, 1810,' when Wesley was in the height of his enthusiasm in propagating the knowledge of Bach's works in England.

composer, employs in his score side-drum, bell, and list of Errata. It does seem unfortunate that, in an crash, whatever the last-named instrument may be. For composers to choose curious subjects as a means of musical expression is no new thing. A manuscript of the 11th-12th century, chiefly astronomical, contains 'Two tables of weights and measures, set to music. The neums are of an early form (? German), written on three lines, of which the F line is occasionally coloured red, and the C line yellow (?).' The titles of this pair of compositions, which are anonymous, are thus given: 'As habet uncia duodecim' and 'Calcus et dimidius fit siliqua.' The temptation to further quotation from informing volume must be resisted; subject cannot be left without an acknowledgment of the tireless industry of Mr. Hughes-Hughes in its compilation. The third and final volume, containing the manuscript instrumental music, will be awaited with much interest, as will Mr. Barclay Squire's catalogue of printed music published before 1800, now in active preparation.

THE ARTICLE 'PSALTER' IN GROVE'S DICTIONARY.

The Writer of the Article' sends us the following communication:

'In my letter of last August-referring to certain criticisms of the bibliographical portions of this article offered by a correspondent of THE MUSICAL TIMES in the July number—I promised to go again to my original authorities, and to examine them once more in relation to the matters at issue. This I have now done, and the practical result, showing the corrections which I am able gratefully to accept, will appear in a list of Errata to be given in the forthcoming volume (IV.) of the Dictionary.

'Concerning this list, it may be said that it includes, beside the small inaccuracies which are to be expected in a work dealing for the first time with a difficult and complicated subject, those also which are due to the printer, when, for instance, in the endeavour to insert fresh information the instructions have not always been correctly understood, and a confusion such as that between the 1560 and 1561 editions of Sternhold has unfortunately been created.

'The corrections which I am unable to accept are of various kinds. Sometimes they refer to the number of tunes in some particular psalter, or of settings by some particular composer, when my estimate does not agree with that of your correspondent; several differences of this kind occur in the description of the psalters of Este and Ravenscroft. In some cases again they are little more than differences of opinion in which I have held to my own, as in that which refers to the tunes of Gibbons in Wither's "Hymns and Songs, &c."; here I had given the number as sixteen, while your correspondent prefers to regard it as fourteen with one of the tunes twice repeated; and in a sense, of course, this is right, but it is also true that at each fresh appearance of the tune it is quite maintained.' We have submitted the above letter to Mr. William Cowan, the writer of the article in our issue of July last (p. 455), who comments upon it as follows:

remaining matters at issue are of small importance, and consist chiefly of queries respecting certain statements of mine which I still think can be transformed by alteration of the rhythm.

'It would be premature to offer much criticism on the above communication before seeing the promised of concerted music.

important work of reference such as Grove's Dictionary, defects due to the printer's failure to follow the instructions given should not have been avoided by more careful revision of the final proofs.

'With regard to my corrections on the statistics of the various psalters and their successive editions, I may say that these corrections were based, not on secondary authorities as hinted in the letter from "The Writer of the Article" in the August number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, but on careful personal examination of the books themselves. I know by experience how difficult it is to attain to absolute accuracy in such investigations, and it is quite possible that errors may be found in my figures, but if it were worth while I am quite prepared to give the details on which my statistics are founded, in regard to all such matters as the numbers of new tunes in particular editions, settings by different composers, &c., &c. A reference is made to the tunes by Gibbons in Wither's "Hymnes and Songs of the Church." If the article had stated that the book contained fourteen tunes, one of which was twice repeated with altered rhythm, no correction would have been needed. But the words in the article are "Sixteen compositions by Orlando Gibbons had been made for it."

'This and many of the other points referred to by me are admittedly matters of slight importance, but when such matters are thought worthy of mention in a work of this nature, it is of some consequence that the information given should be accurate.

'The Writer of the Article' (in Grove) makes no reference to the letter of Dr. Henry Watson on this subject which appeared in our issue of September last, but he will doubtless deal with that aspect of the question in the promised Errata.

Church and Organ Music.

ASCENSIONTIDE MUSIC.

The Feast of Ascension ranks with Christmas, Easter Day and Whitsunday in that it has assigned to it Proper Psalms, Proper Lessons, a special Collect, Epistle and Gospel, together with a Proper Preface. In this special way did the compilers of the Prayer Book honour this festival. Its observance in the early Church is testified to by St. Augustine, who says:

For those things which are received and observed all over the world, not as written in scripture, but as handed down to us by tradition, we conceive to be instituted by the Apostles themselves or some numerous Council whose authority is of very great use in the Church. Such are the anniversary solemnities of our Saviour's passion and resurrection, and ascension into heaven, and the coming of the Holy Ghost from heaven.

In considering some of the greatest music specially written for Ascension Day, one naturally turns to John Sebastian Bach. And at the outset we are met John Sebastian Bach. with the wonderful productivity of the great Cantor. In the year 1735—when he was fifty years of age and in the plenitude of his powers—we find that he composed a new church cantata for every Sunday and holy-day which fell between Easter and Whitsunday, with the single exception, perhaps, of the first Sunday after Easter, and the manuscript of the cantata for that day may have been lost. over, for Ascensiontide that year Bach composed two cantatas, 'a rare occurrence,' says Spitta, 'but then for this festival it was necessary to perform two pieces

The chief of these two Ascensiontide cantatas is 'God goeth up with shouting' ('Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen'). Preserved in the Royal Library at Berlin is the autograph score, entitled by Bach:

Festo Ascensionis Christi Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen à 4 Voci, 3 Trombe, Tamburi, 2 Hautbois, 2 Violini, Viola e Continuo di Joh: Seb: Bach.

The work consists of a splendid opening chorus (in C) in which, after six bars of adagio (instrumental), the trumpet enters with fine effect, rousingly preparing for the choral outburst, at bar 15 of the alla breve section, 'God goeth up with shouting.' This exhilarating 'God goeth up with shouting.' chorus—in four parts throughout and presenting no difficulties—with its noble theme and masterly working is a veritable uplift of praise. Then follow recitatives and solos for the usual four voices, this concise and interesting work finishing with the simple choral which so fitly sets its seal upon what has gone before.

Passing to our own composers of church music we find that William Byrd has set the Introit for the Sunday after Ascension in a five-part anthem 'I will not leave you comfortless,' which first appeared in the 'Gradualia,' Book II. (1610). To the credit of Orlando Gibbons can be placed two anthems, 'O God the King of Glory' (a setting of the Collect after Ascension Day), and 'Lift up your heads.' Purcell composed a four-part anthem worthy of the occasion in 'O all ye people, clap your hands,' which has been edited by Sir Frederick Bridge. This anthem, in three short movements, has several points of interest, especially the final phrase, 'and thence [He] shall judge the world at last,' the harmonies at this point being most impressive in their masterly treatment.

Dr. Croft has left us some cheerful and melodious strains in his well-known anthem 'God is gone up with a merry noise.' In this the fugalities of the first and last movements find pleasant relief in the tuneful middle section, 'O sing praises,' in which the phrases reflect the charm of old-world courtesy in oft-repeated and politely expressed request to 'sing praises'; and how beautiful the cadence, when the second soprano soars above the first, whereby the fifth note of the scale becomes the final melody-note. Nowhere is this anthem sung with more beautiful effect than at King's College Chapel, Cambridge.

Of modern anthems for the Feast of Ascension, two may be named as being of opposite degrees of difficulty. Barnby's 'King all glorious,' inscribed to 'John Goss, Esquire,' is designated 'A motett for soli and chorus, translated from the Greek by the Rev. J. C. Keble.' The organ accompaniment is printed on three staves, and as the anthem has been orchestrated by the composer, it is available for festival purposes. 'Lift up your heads,' by the late Dr. John Larkin Hopkins, is a simple setting of Ascensiontide words that places it quite within the reach of choirs of limited resources. Those seeking a modern 'short oratorio' suitable for the church season under consideration will find it in 'The Ascension,' composed by Dr. H. J. Edwards, of Barnstaple.

THE NEW ORGANIST OF CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

Mr. Sydney Hugo Nicholson, M.A., Mus.B. (Oxon.), acting-organist of Carlisle Cathedral since 1904, has been appointed organist of Canterbury Cathedral, in succession to Dr. H. C. Perrin, who will shortly leave England to take up the duties of his Canadian appointment.

at the Royal College of Music. In 1898 he became organist of Barnet Parish Church, and in 1903 of the Lower Chapel, Eton College. He has composed an Evening Service in A flat, British songs for British Boys, a choral ballad, Ivry, and a cantata for female voices 'The Luck of Edenhall.' During his residence at Carlisle, Mr. Nicholson has taken a warm interest and active part in the musical competition movement in the North of England, and it is largely owing to his exertions that a new organ has been placed in the cathedral.

HINTS TO ORGANISTS.

Dr. William Prendergast read, on March 30, an instructive paper before the Winchester and District Association of Organists, his subject being the important one of Organ accompaniment in the church service.' The following are some of the wise words uttered by the organist of Winchester Cathedral on that occasion:

A musician worthy of the name, whether he be professional or amateur, is never content to stand still in his art, and especially is this the case with the organist.

It should be remembered that the quality of the stops employed is often reflected in the voices, and that a loud harsh organ frequently brings about similar characteristics in the singers.

The taste of a congregation can be moulded by the organist.

It is often possible to obtain quite as varied effects on a small organ as on a larger instrument, and many an organist has at hand beautiful combinations for which he has never taken the trouble to search, and which are never heard until perchance some stranger happens to come upon them.

Phrasing is one of the most important (and least understood) departments of music. Whether allied to words or not, music should be flexible, but the cut and dried dividing into bars, which from a practical point of view has been proved necessary, has had the effect of converting compositions possessing underlying beauty of thought and symmetry into mere mechanical rhythmic successions of sounds. The least an organist can do is to make sense of his phrasing.

Sir Frederick Bridge sailed on April 18 for New York en route for Canada. The object of his journey is to deliver a series of lectures throughout the Dominion on the 'Cathedral Music of England.' Illustrations to these lectures will be sung by the church choirs of Canada from two books of anthems, suitable for large and small choirs respectively, which have been specially published by Messrs. Novello for the occasion. The entire tour, and all the arrangements connected therewith, have been well organized by Dr. Charles Harriss.

Mr. W. D. St. Leger has been the gratified recipient of a testimonial to commemorate his 'good and true' service as organist of Madras Cathedral during the past thirty years. The presentation, which took the form of an address and a cheque for Rs. 1,774, was made by the Hon. Sir Ralph Benson at a meeting held on March 23 in the Diocesan Library of the Cathedral. In the course of his remarks thanking the donors for their fully appreciated gift to him, Mr. St. Leger said that when he took up his first appointment -which was at St. Edmund's School, Canterbury, 'at the mature age of fourteen'-he had felt that the post of organist was one of very great responsibility and one of very high privilege, and this he had since found to be actually the case. The post of organist was one which the man in the street might look upon as of very little significance, but he did not regard it in that light. An organist was responsible for assisting the congregation in their worship; Mr. Nicholson, who is thirty-three years of age and it was his duty to aid and elevate them. He (Mr. St. Leger) a son of Sir Charles Nicholson, Bart., formerly did his best to carry out this responsibility by making the Speaker of the House of Assembly at Sydney, studied music of the Church a real aid to public worship.

LENTEN SPECIAL SERVICES.

That the oratorio is increasingly finding its way into the church, its true home, is abundantly proved by the subjoined long list of services held during the past Lent at various cathedrals and churches. In almost every instance an orchestra has been employed to heighten the means of expression which so eminently characterise these masterpieces of sacred music. Reverence on the part of those whose privilege it has been to sing and play, no less than the devotional attitude of the large congregations assembled together on these occasions, are gratifying features of performances that will be more and more appreciated and find a fuller outlet as time goes on.

CATHEDRALS.

The annual Lenten performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion at St. Paul's Cathedral is an event always looked forward to and enjoyed by those who are privileged to hear the music under most favourable conditions. So it was on Tuesday in Holy-week (April 14), when the sublime work was given, with full orchestral accompaniment, under the experienced and reverential direction of Sir George Martin, with Mr. Charles Macpherson at the organ.

On Wednesday in Passion Week (April 8) the annual performance was given in Wells Cathedral of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. There was an excellent orchestra of nearly fifty performers, and a chorus of nearly 200 voices composed of the Choral Societies of Wells, Shepton Mallet, Street and Widmore, assisted by the cathedral choir. The soprano solos were rendered by the cathedral choristers, the narrator's part was sung by Mr. W. Partridge, and the words of our Lord by Mr. A. Trowbridge, both members of the cathedral choir. The Rev. Dr. Davis, organist of the cathedral, conducted, and Mrs. W. S. Hodgkinson presided at the organ. Previous to the service a short organ recital of the works of Bach was given by Mr. F. P. Wheeldon, assistant-organist of the cathedral.

The Cathedral Oratorio Society at Chichester sang Gounod's 'Redemption' in the cathedral on March 26, under the direction of the organist, Mr. F. J. W. Crowe. The choir and orchestra (led by Mr. W. A. Baker) consisted of 250 performers, and Mr. Edward Stephenson, organist of Birmingham Cathedral, presided at the organ. Mr. Clifford Hunnybun, Mr. Reginald Stewart, and the Rev. K. H. Macdermott, vicar of Bosham, were the soloists, the lastnamed singing the solos assigned to our Lord. The soprano solos were sung by the cathedral choristers.

Dvorák's 'At the foot of the Cross' (the English version of his setting of the Stabat Mater) was sung at Birmingham Cathedral on April 17, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Edward Stephenson, who accompanied this beautiful and devotional work on the organ.

The choir of Ripon Cathedral, augmented by the local Choral Society, sang a selection from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion on Sunday, March 22, to the edification of a large congregation. Mr. C. H. Moody was at the organ.

At Wakefield Cathedral on April 9, Spohr's 'Calvary' was given, under the conductorship of Mr. J. N. Hardy, the cathedral organist, with purely local forces, a string orchestra being associated with the organ.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was performed at Durham Cathedral on April' 8 and 12, under the direction of the organist, the Rev. Arnold D. Culley.

The church of St. Mary Redcliff, Bristol, was crowded on April 4, when Parts 1 and 2 of Gounod's 'Redemption' were sung by the joint choirs of the church and Bedminster Parish Church, accompanied by an orchestra led by Mr. Harold Bernard. The soloists were Miss Elizabeth Morgan, Miss Clara Addersley, Mr. F. Norcup (of Westminster Abbey), and Mr. C. Davis Brooks (of King's College Chapel, Cambridge). Mr. R. T. Morgan, organist of St. Mary Redcliff, was at the organ, and Mr. F. W. Hek, organist of Bedminster Church, conducted.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was given with augmented choir and full orchestra at Huddersfield Parish Church on April 1, under the direction of Dr. Eaglefield Hull, organist of the church. The solos were taken by the choirmen and the alto solos were sung by all the boys, with good results. The oboi d'amore were played by Messrs. F. and H. Holt, of Leeds, and the violin solo by the leader of the orchestra. Herr Johan Rasch. Mr. H. Sandwell sang the narrator's part for the fifteenth time, and Mr. William Riley that of Christ.

The choir of Tewkesbury Abbey sang Mendelssohn's unfinished oratorio, 'Christus' after Evensong on Sunday, March 29, and on Sunday, April 12, Handel's 'Passion,' in the edition abridged by Rev. J. Baden Powell. The soloists were Miss B. Morgan (soprano), Mr. H. Peacey (tenor), and Messrs. G. Hayward, L. G. Badham and Fred Owens (basses). Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, organist and choirmaster of the Abbey, presided at the organ.

Verdi's 'Requiem' was sung at the oratorio service held at Brixton Church on Sunday afternoon, April 5, by the Brixton Oratorio Choir of over 100 voices, accompanied by a full professional orchestra led by Mr. R. Gray. The soloists were Miss Ada Tunks, Miss Marie St. John Firth, Mr. John Bardesley, and Mr. Arthur Walenn. Mr. Welton Hickin was at the organ, and Mr. Douglas Redman, organist of the church, conducted.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung at St. Peter's Collegiate Church, Wolverhampton, on April 7, the church choir being augmented by a section of the Festival Choral Society. The soloists were the church choristers, Miss Wilhelmina Hodgson, and Messrs. Fredericks and Coleman, of Lichfield Cathedral. Mr. F. H. Houldershaw conducted, and Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, was at the organ.

Handel's 'Passion' was sung at St. Chad's Church, Headingley, Leeds, on April 15, under the direction of Mr. H. Percy Richardson, organist and choirmaster of the church. The soloists were Miss Swailes, and Messrs. Barnes, Whiteley and Chamberlain. A small but efficient string orchestra, together with the organ (Mr. Hamer), played the accompaniments.

At St. Thomas's Church, Bristol, on April 5, Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung by an augmented choir of seventy voices, accompanied by a band led by Mr. Ernest Lane. The soloists were Madame Eva Hartshorne and Mr. Herbert Spiller. Mr. E. H. Luton conducted, and Mr. W. A. Lamb was the organist at this impressive service.

At the church of St. Michael and All Angels, Little Ilford, the following works were sung during Lent, Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary,' Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' Tozer's 'Way of the Cross' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer.' They were performed under the direction of Mr. F. E. Wilson, organist of the church.

Maunder's Lenten cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' was sung at the British Embassy Church, Paris, on Maundy Thursday, under the direction of Mr. Percy J. Vincent, organist and choirmaster. The choir consisted of fifty voices, and Mr. J. West presided at the organ.

The annual performance at Leeds Parish Church of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion took place on April 13, under the direction of Dr. Edward C. Bairstow, organist and choirmaster, in the presence of a crowded and reverent congregation.

At All Saints' Church, Scarborough, Dr. Ely has introduced special services at which Brahms's 'German Requiem' and the 'Seven words from the Cross,' by Dubois, have been given.

Following the commendable practice of previous years, Bach's 'St. John' Passion has been sung at St. Anne's Church, Soho, on several occasions during Lent under the able direction of Mr. E. H. Thorne.

Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was sung on April 15 at All Saints' Church, Bradford, under the direction of Mr. Charles Stott.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' (Part II.) was sung at St. Stephen's Church, St. Albans, on Sunday afternoon, April 5. The soloists were Miss Evelyn Clark, Miss Maud Wright, Mr. T. Bennett Griffin and Mr. Felix Hotchkiss. The accompaniments were played on the organ by Mr. George F. Wood, organist and choirmaster of the church.

The annual prize distribution of the York Minster Choir School took place on April 20, at the Song School, the Dean presiding. On that occasion Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, paid a high tribute to Mr. G. A. Scaife, head-master of the School, for the help he rendered him in his work with the choristers. Mr. Noble also referred to the excellent theoretical work of the boys, both in four-part harmony and two-part counterpoint. 'Owing to Mr. Scaife's excellent training,' he said, 'the boys had been able to take the chorus work in "The Dream of Gerontius."' The third number of the Old Choir Boys' Magazine fully maintains the interest of its predecessors under the able editorship of Mr. Scaife. Canon Julian continues his article on 'Sacred carols, ancient and modern,' as does Mr. A. H. Brown his notes on 'Monuments and monumental inscriptions.' No. 60 in the latter is to be found at St. John the Baptist Church, Widford, Hertfordshire, and reads:

In memory of BENJAMIN FAINT, Forty years Clerk of this parish, who died Jan. 14, 1816, aged 81 years, after a conjugal life of upwards of 60 years with his widow who survived him.

This is certainly an instance of faint heart having won fair

The twentieth annual Service of Praise of the Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London choirs was held at St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church on March 31. Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' (Psalm xlii.), sung in its entirety, formed the anthem, the soprano soloist being Miss Louise Burns. Mr. Howard Vernon accompanied throughout the service, and voluntaries were played by Dr. Leonard N. Fowles and Dr. H. H. L. Middleton. Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerson conducted. The service was repeated at Trinity Presbyterian Church of England, Stratford, on April 9, by the combined choirs of Stratford, Ilford and Leytonstone.

A selection from Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung at Holy Trinity Church, Stroud Green, on April 11, under the direction of the organist, Mr. H. J. Timothy.

Messrs. Novello have recently published two special catalogues: (1) 'A short selected list of popular anthems for all seasons,' and (2) 'A short selected list of popular services.' Both lists are classified under 'easy,' 'moderately difficult, and 'more advanced,' while the Anthem list is also arranged under the headings 'general' and the various church seasons of the year. These classified lists—greatly reduced from the complete catalogues—have been compiled to facilitate reference and to furnish a guide in choosing anthems and services varying in difficulty. Copies of these handy books of reference may be obtained gratis on application to Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd.

Reviews.

Ludwig the Second, King of Bavaria. By Clara Tschudi, translated from the Norwegian by Ethel Harriet Hearn.

[Swan Sonnenshein & Co., Ltd.]

The life-story of Wagner's royal and munificent patron is a somewhat sad one. Throughout its short existence—under forty-one years—it was darkened by the cloud of mental aberration which burst by the self-inflicted death of the ill-fated monarch. To musicians, however, the career of the king is one of special interest by reason of its intimate relations with Wagner. At the age of sixteen, Ludwig was so deeply impressed by a performance of 'Lohengrin' that, when two years later he came to the throne, he sent for Wagner to come to Munich, where for about eighteen months he resided in close proximity to the court. Despite the disparity in their ages—Wagner was fifty-one, the king the disparity in their ages—Wagner was fifty-one, the king eighteen—Ludwig became deeply infatuated with the composer, not only to the extent of discharging Wagner's debts, but relieving him from those financial anxieties which attended his earlier years, by granting him an annuity for life. Wagner appears to have reciprocated this infatuation, or else, he played the game well: 'I always hasten to him as a loved one,' he writes, and 'we often sit for hours lost in contemplation of one another.'

The lost in contemplation of one another.'

The king himself does not appear to have been very musical, therefore 'Wagner's works probably attracted him more from their fantastic poetry than on account of their musical qualities.' At all events, the first thing that Wagner did on his arrival at Munich was diplomatically to compose, for a military band, the Huldigungs Marsch, a circumstance, by the way, that is not mentioned in this book. Some interesting information is given concerning the production of Tristan, on June 10, 1865, under the direction of Hans von Bülow, and with it a typical anecdote showing the sharp-witted tongue of the redoubtable Hans. When he demanded an extension of the orchestra, Herr Penckmayer, the stage manager, replied that this would mean the abolition of thirty stalls. Bülow thereupon observed: 'What does it matter if there are thirty rascals more or less in the theatre?' For the remaining incidents connected with the joint lives of Ludwig and Wagner, the reader is referred to a volume which will be read with interest, especially for its musical associations. The book is prefaced by a coloured portrait of the king who, in August, 1865, prophetically wrote to Wagner: 'When we two are no more, our work will serve as a shining model for posterity. It will delight centuries: and our hearts will glow with enthusiasm for the art which is from God, and is everlasting.'

The above compositions present variety in style and sentiment calculated to meet the most divergent tastes.

Mr. Granville Bantock demands for his part-song 'On Himalay' a well-drilled choir who will bring brains as well as voices to their task. These conditions being fulfilled, satisfactory results will follow. Mr. Holbrooke also requires well-trained singers to do justice to his 'Zante' and 'Thro' groves sequested.' The former is written for first and second sopranos, and first and second contraltos, and is described as a 'dramatic choral song,' which is justified by the text and the music. The second example from his pen is for first and second sopranos, contralto, tenor and bass, and is intended to be sung unaccompanied. Being written in five parts the richness of the harmonic effects is thereby increased, and this, combined with the grace of the music, makes the way 'Thro' groves sequested.' attractive.

increased, and this, combined with the grace of the music, makes the way 'Thro' groves sequested,' attractive.

The patriotic ring in Campbell's well-known 'Battle of the Baltic' has inspired Dr. Lloyd to write music that, if well rendered, would stir the pulses of singers and listeners. The dramatic points have been turned to good account by the composer, and the conclusion is impressive. 'Now the golden morn' is allied to flowing strains by Mr. John E. West, and there is a genial freshness about the music that is very pleasing. The humorous spirit pervading the advice given by the 17th century poet Brome, has been happily caught by Mr. Simson, and 'The Counsel' may be recommended as a healthy antidote to despairing lovers.

'The mother's lamentation' is an arrangement of an Irish folk-song of pathetic character, in which Mr. Dunhill does not hesitate to employ diminished sevenths and other modern harmonic devices calculated to please modern ears, although they may startle upholders of antiquarian consistency. The same indulgence is noticeable in the setting of the old Border folk-song 'The keel row,'although not to the extent of the previous example. 'Who rides for the King?' is a stirring part-song that would be appropriate for a social evening of the new 'Territorialists,' to whom we recommend Mr. Somerville's ditty.

Great Musicians. By Ernest Oldmeadow. [E. Grant Richards.]

The title of this book per se is a little misleading, because certain giants of the art, Beethoven to wit, are excluded in the survey. Not that Mr. Oldmeadow's master-musicians are small men, but as the last of them was born in 1685 it would have been better to have added a qualifying word to the designation of this very readable book. Beginning with 'The great unknown,' and followed by a chapter on 'The Bros.) unceasing chant' (Plainsong), the author lucidly treats, in successive chapters, of Orlando Lassus, Palestrina, Monteverde, Lully, Rameau, Purcell, Handel (the year of whose death by a slip of the pen is given as 1859) and Bach. In his preface Mr. Oldmeadow lays stress on the fact that he writes for 'general readers' and not primarily for 'well-instructed musicians'; but even the latter may peruse his pages without hurting their well-instructedness. Not the least attractive features of a welcome addition to musical literature are the thirty-two illustrations scattered throughout the volume. One of these is a reduced facsimile of the title-page of Palestrina's 'Missarum, Liber Primus,' photographed from the 1572 edition of that work in the British Museum. It would have been a little more satisfactory if the size of the original had been stated (it is 16×10 inches); and there is no index to the book.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Te Deum, Benedictus, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in the Key of E flat. By W. A. C. Cruickshank.

Office for the Holy Communion, and Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in the Key of E flat. By George J. Bennett.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Cruickshank's setting of the canticles is for men's voices—alto, first and second tenor, and bass—and was composed, by request, for the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral. The music is direct in expression, and the harmonic scheme is diatonic. In the Te Deum a somewhat novel procedure has been adopted in the setting of the lines 'Thou art the King of Glory: O Christ. Thou art the everlasting Son: of the Father,' and this, combined with the subsequent passage for basses alone, is a distinguishing feature of the setting. There are also short tenor and bass solos. The close is impressive.

The Benedictus is written in chant form, but variety is obtained by skilful treatment which includes a transition from the tonality of E flat to that of five sharps at the words 'And Thou, Child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest.'

The music allied to the Magnificat is extremely graceful. It includes two tenor solos and a somewhat elaborate Amen. Considerable freshness marks the arrangement of the Nunc dimittis, which begins with a bass solo and concludes with the Gloria of the Magnificat.

Dr. Bennett's music to the Holy Communion is conceived in that devotional and human spirit which distinguishes the best modern church music. It is direct in expression, and although the part-writing demands a well-trained choir, it presents no exceptional difficulties. The music is in four parts throughout, with the exception of the Benedictus, which opens with a short tenor solo.

The setting of the evening canticles, by the same composer, is similar in character; albeit Dr. Bennett has allowed himself more freedom in his harmonic scheme and greater variety of effects in the treatment of the voices. The strains allied to the Nunc dimittis are exceedingly graceful, and a fourfold Amen sets its seal on the impressiveness and the musical interest of a welcome addition to church music.

Obituary.

We much regret to record the death, at the age of sixty-seven, of Mr. JOSEPH EDWARD STREET, the genial and popular secretary of the Madrigal Society, which took place at his residence, Woodside, Caterham, on March 31. The Street family, from father to son, have been members of the Madrigal Society since the year 1795. During the greater part of those 113 years they have rendered useful and valuable service to this ancient musical organization in the capacity of either secretary or librarian. The late Mr. Street's grandfather joined the Society in 1795, his father in 1827, and he himself in 1870. In the following year he (Mr. J. Edward Street) was appointed secretary, an office he worthily held till 1905, when he was elected president. He fully maintained the traditions of this honourable office for two years, during which time his son, Mr. Oscar W. Street, ably discharged the secretarial duties. On the election last year of Sir George Martin as president, Mr. Street resumed the secretaryship, a post he filled with distinction and never-failing courtesy for the long period of thirty-eight years. In May, 1895, being the family centenary, the Society presented him with their gold medal and an illuminated address. As one who was held in the highest esterm by all who knew him. Mr. Street will be greatly esterm by all who knew him, Mr. Street will be greatly missed at the enjoyable music-makings of the Madrigal

The death of MR. EDWARD CHADFIELD—which occurred at 'Guestling Peep,' Milward Road, Hastings, on March 31 is recorded with regret. Born at Derby on August 1, 1827, he studied under Henry Smart, and subsequently became a pupil of Henri Rosellen and Korbach at Paris. For many years he successfully practised his profession at Derby, holding at different periods the organistships of St. Werburgh's and All Saints' churches in his native town. Having taken an active part in the initiation of the Incorporated Society of Musicians in 1882, he was induced to accept the office of honorary general secretary in 1885. Upon the incorpora-tion of the Society in 1892, and the removal of its headquarters to London, Mr. Chadfield became the salaried secretary, an office he worthily held until 1907, when he was succeeded by his son, Mr. Hugo Chadfield. A man of genial nature and courteous bearing, Mr. Chadfield was held in great respect by those who knew him, either in his official or private life. His remains were interred at Nottingham Road Cemetery, Derby, on April 4, amid many manifestations of respect.

The death, on April 9, at Plymouth, is recorded with regret of MR. ROBERT SMITH, head of the firm of Messrs. Parker & Smith, pianoforte manufacturers, Plymouth. Born at Budleigh Salterton in 1847, Mr. Smith was well known in the West of England for his musical attainments, his lectures on acoustics at the Plymouth Institution, in which he took a warm interest, being remarkable for their erudition. During the year of his Presidency, 1903-4, he discoursed on 'The theory of Evolution as applied to the art of music,' this, his presidential address, being based on the results of his studies and researches in the science of music extending over many years. In early life he was associated with the choir of St. Peter's Church, and he will be remembered as an active member of the old Plymouth Vocal Association, conducted by the late Mr. F. N. Löhr. Mr. Smith has left a widow (formerly Miss Bending, of London) and four daughters. All the latter are most accomplished musicians, whose excellent chamber concerts have several times been referred to in these columns.

The death is announced of Herr Josef Sucher, the eminent conductor. Born at Döbör, Eisenburg, Hungary, November 23, 1843 (according to Riemann), he became a chorister in the Hofkapelle, Vienna, joining on the same day as Hans Richter. After conducting experiences at Vienna, he became conductor of the City Theatre, Leipzig, in 1876, and in 1879 he settled at Hamburg. From 1888 to 1899, when he retired, Sucher was conductor of the Royal Opera, Berlin. In his youth he was a prolific composer. An opera by him, called 'Ilse,' was performed at Vienna; his best-known published work is a Lieder-cyclus entitled Ruheart.' In 1877 Herr Sucher married Fräulein Rosa Hasselbeck, the eminent Wagnerian singer. Frau Sucher's magnificent impersonation of Isolde at the first performance of Wagner's 'Tristan' in England, on June 20, 1882, will long be remembered.

THE EVOLUTION OF MELODY.

- - - - -

Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill read an interesting and thoughtful paper on the above subject, before the Musical Association, at the King's Room, Conduit Street (Broadwood's), on April 21.

At the outset the lecturer referred to melody as a subject of universal interest. Music as a science, as an intellectual power, or as an expression of the indefinite and indefinable forces which dominate the soul of the artist and crave for outlet, might not appeal with any great measure of certainty or directness to the popular mind: but to the great majority of ordinary listeners melody is the one quality in music which really counts; and the musician himself, however well-tutored he may be, can never afford to lose sight of those elements which strike straight home to everyone which elicit sympathetic response, not only from the musically educated but from those who, without technical knowledge, are keenly perceptible to the influence of beauty. It might be as well to attempt a new definition of melody: he would describe it as 'the simplest possible manifestation of an inherent feeling for beauty, through the medium of single musical sounds. Two essential things must exist before a melody could be created—a musical scale,

Mr. Dunhill dwelt in some detail upon this subject of scale-development, and the foundation of design upon the natural rhythmic instincts of the human race — instincts expressed in a primitive form by the beating of drums and tom-toms, the regular movements of the body in dancing, and the varied emphasis of language. Though rhythm was a natural instinct, it so happened that the earliest forms of intellectual music did not draw very largely upon that quality. The early cultivation of the art was entirely on the vocal side, and its serious study was confined to those who worked in the service of the Church. From a mere inflected monotone there arose an elementary form of plain-song, and from this was developed a crude species of polyphony. The origin of the invention of polyphony was no doubt simply a desire to provide each singer with something interesting to The next step was that every voice should take its share in the development of a single idea, not simply singing its own part for its own sake, but answering and extending passages prominent in the other parts.

The culmination of this development came with the appearance of Palestrina, who brought this form of writing to such a high state of perfection and beauty that musical composition, within the same limits, could hardly have progressed further. After this period came a revolt against the strictness and severity of polyphonic music, and the composers arose who are sometimes spoken of as the founders of the Homophonic school. Melody was confined to a single part and instrumental accompaniment substituted for polyphony. At first the accompaniment employed consisted merely of an unpretentious bass part played by a solitary instrument, but the success of these early efforts led to further developments; a great deal of boldness was exhibited by some writers, notably by Monteverde, who for the first time made use of discords without preparation. The work of the Homophonic school might certainly, by itself, be regarded as a retrograde movement, but historically it proved to be really a new beginning on new lines. The 17th century saw many innovations in the domain of who desired to exhibit their powers of flexible vocalisation. This influence proved in the long run to be not altogether a bad one, and helped to free melody from too great a preponderance of formality and stiffness.

After dwelling upon the new aspects of melody shown in the works of Bach, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, Mr. Dunhill spoke of modern developments, and explained how the system of the 'Leit-motif'—extensively developed, though not absolutely invented, by Wagner—had produced an enormous effect upon the works of the great composers of instrumental music of our own day. The most widely talked-of, and probably the most genuinely powerful of all the adherents to these newly-applied principles, was Richard Strauss. The works of Elgar contained many melodies of a genuinely beautiful cast—full of point, precision, and vitality.

. In France an apostle of impressionism, Claude Debussy, had been working great changes. His methods, indeed, were stranger than those of Strauss, though one felt that they might not possess the strength to create a lasting effect upon his successors. Almost all the charm of his music might be said to lie in a sort of delicacy of rhythm and quiet tinting of the orchestration—rhythm with all the coarseness and sharpness eliminated, and colour with no depth or sonority

It would seem that, in spite of the enthusiasm which had greeted the work of such writers as Brahms, Dvorák, and Tchaikovsky — work in which the melodies were modelled on classical lines, and definitely dependent upon design-the immediate effect of their example upon the rising generation had been comparatively slight. It is impossible to close one's eyes to the fact that the music of impossible to close one's eyes to the fact that the music of to-day is plunging headlong into a new sphere, and that the melodic designs presented are not only more curious and irregular, but a great deal less decorative than those of any previous period in musical history. It is as if we were to some extent reverting to the earliest forms of musical expression—the vague, half-articulate utterances of primitive man—whilst at the same time employing all the vast resources of modern instrumentation in order to create an atmosphere, or form a background. Activity, however, is atmosphere, or form a background. Activity, however, is a sure sign of life, and if melody were merely standing still, and speaking to us in the same accents throughout succeeding generations, it would be a certain proof that its life was at a low ebb. We should try to believe very firmly in its vitality, for then we need not be dismayed if some of the shapes into which it was moulded seemed wayward or crooked. Each year of growth had its purpose, and the most restless age might well prove to be the age of the greatest progress towards some unknown regions of noble and splendid accomplishment.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

A serious hiatus in the repertory of the Royal Choral Society has now been filled by the Mass in B minor of John Sebastian Bach. There is no need to inquire the reason of the long delay in performing this stupendous choral creation of the great cantor by the Kensington choristers. Suffice it to repeat the oft-quoted proverb Better late than never,' and to express the hope that now the work has been performed by Sir Frederick Bridge's forces it will be often repeated.

One thing that struck the hearer at the Royal Albert Hall on April 2 was the excellent tone of the choir no less than the earnestness with which the singers threw themselves into their work. One missed the incisiveness of tone of northern choralists, and London choirs have good leeway to make up in the matter of attack and that certainty of utterance which carries conviction, the disappointing rendering of the glorious bass passage 'Et iterum venturus' being a case in point. But allowing for all this, the performance, especially as a first attempt, was one upon which both conductor and choir may be warmly felicitated. It was evident that infinite pains had been taken in the preparation of a difficult work that was more or less new to the choir. Bach's choral idiom is not one to be acquired all at once or to be regarded superficially. Those subtle touches with which the Mass abounds are among the greatest attributes of genius, and they need long and patient study before their depths of expression can be fathomed; therefore we may look forward to a more faultless rendering of the masterpiece than was given on this occasion. Are not clearness of outline and the avoidance of any approach to hyper-velocity two important factors in the true rendering of Bach's immortal strains?

Of the quartet of soloists-Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Marion Yelland, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Frederick Ranalowthe first-named merits special mention for her rendering of Laudamus Te,' and Mr. Lloyd Chandos increased his reputation by his excellent singing. As at the last Leeds festival, the solos were accompanied by a small orchestra placed in the vicinity of an upright pianoforte upon which Sir Charles Stanford filled in the figured bass, and under whose direction the little orchestra played their important part in the work. The obbligato parts were safe in the hands of Mr. A. W. Payne (violin), Mr. Malsch (oboe d'amore) and Mr. Borsdorf (horn). In regard to the organ, at which and Mr. Borsdorf (horn). In regard to the organ, at which Mr. H. L. Balfour presided, there were moments when its sounds were somewhat un-Bachlike: we refer especially to the blasts at the final chords of some of the choruses, which were very nerve-trying in their blatancy, and certain ejaculatory chords suggestive of elephantine gambolling. So huge an instrument as that at the Albert Hall needs very careful handling in a composition such as Bach's B minor Mass, and mere 'effects' should not find a place in music which speaks for itself in its natural sublimity and dignified restraint. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted the choral portion of the Mass with that resourcefulness which is characteristic of his vigorous leadership. It should be stated that the Mass was sung at the low pitch, Mr. Balfour transposing the whole of the organ part, for which he deserves all credit.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

At the concert given on March 26 the programme was as follows:

Overture, 'Oberon'
New Viola concerto (first public performance)
Mr. LIONEL TERTIS.

Revious.

Revious.

Lyric scene, 'Cleopatra' Madame BLANCHE MARCHESI. Berlioz.

Introduction and Closing scene, 'Tristan' Symphony in F (No. 4) Wagner.

The interest of this concert centred in the new concerto, and more especially upon the appearance of Mr. Landon Ronald as conductor for the first time at the Society's concerts. Mr. York Bowen displays an artistic disregard of popularity in devoting so many of his undoubtedly beautiful ideas to the viola. The genius of the instrument does not fit the frame of a large form; but if a composition of this length for the viola could be made fully acceptable, Mr. Lionel Tertis might be expected to succeed. His playing on this occasion confirmed his position in the front rank of viola players. Madame Marchesi sang the Berlioz scena magnificently, and received an ovation she fully deserved. It is not too much to say that the interpretation of the Tchaikovsky Symphony was one of the finest that has been heard in London. In this stirring work, and throughout the concert, Mr. Landon Ronald displayed a mastery of the art of conducting that confirmed the high reputation he has elsewhere gained.

The concert on April 9 furnished an interesting selection:

"The Flying Dutchman" Wagner. Overture Pianoforte Concerto in B flat (No. 2) ... Mr. Evlyn Howard-Jones. Brahms.

Prelude and three songs (Nos. 4, 5 and 8) from 'Sappho'

Grantville Bantock.

Miss Edith Clegg. Symphony in C major

Mr. Howard-Jones made a successful first appearance at these concerts, and gave a powerful interpretation of the exacting concerto. His technique and insight into the significance of Brahms's difficult idioms place him high among modern pianists. The 'Sappho' songs, heard on this occasion for the first time, made a deep impression under the conductor-ship of the composer. Mr. Bantock is at his best in translating into music the dreaminess and passionate yearning of these fine poems. Miss Clegg sang with much charm, but her voice was at times submerged in the flood of orchestration. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted with his usual ability the remaining numbers of the programme. Both concerts took place at Queen's Hall.

BACH'S B MINOR MASS AT NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The artistic enterprise which has long been the watchword of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union reached its culmination on April I in a remarkable interpretation of Bach's Mass in B minor. The performance took place in the inadequate if not dangerous Town Hall of Newcastle, which was crowded; indeed, every ticket was sold previous to the concert, which speaks well for the musical perception of the good people of Newcastle.

Opinions differ upon the method of interpreting Bach. There are some who insist on a certain austerity born of academic restraint; others there are who favour that sensuous emotionalism which seems to be the birthright of the ultramodern composer; while not a few, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left, find their greatest satisfaction in a via media. To those who adopt any or either of these courses there were one or two things in the Newcastle performance that detracted just a little from a pure enjoyment of the great Cantor's music—the explosive sforzandos in the opening Kyrie, and the speed at which some of the choruses were The former blemish detracted from the dignity of a fugal subject, and Bach must not have any suggestion of motor-car impetuosity. Having made this little protest, purely in the spirit of friendly criticism, there is nothing but praise for the full-voiced Newcastle choristers who thrilled the listener by their tenderest tones no less than by their ecstatic outburst of triumphant song. Every member of the choir sang as though their hearts as well as their voices were in the music. Moreover, they all seemed to be imbued with the saying of Emerson, 'Nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm.' Proof of this, if proof were needed, lay in the fact that, from time to time, some of the tenors of the choir met together privately for practice in order to be well up in their part. Such devotion to the cause of art deserves full recognition, as does the splendid choral singing which made this concert memorable in the history of this excellent Society on the banks of the Tyne.

The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls (who sang only in the duets), Madame Amy Dewhurst, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. Francis Harford. Of these efficient singers Madame Amy Dewhurst made a most favourable impression by her chaste rendering of the 'Laudamus Te' and the other solos committed to her charge, while it suffices to say that Mr. Harford has made Bach a special study, of which he gave ample proof during the course of the evening. The accompaniments were played by the Hallé Orchestra, the obbligati parts to the solos being safe in the hands of Mr. Rawdon Briggs (violin), Mr. Charles Reynolds (oboe d'amore) and Mr. F. Paersch (horn).

Mr. W. G. Whittaker rendered good service at the pianoforte, and Mr. Thomas Wilkinson made a judicious use of the organ. Dr. Henry Coward, who has the precious gift of magnetising his singers with his own enthusiasm, must be commended for the pains he had taken in bringing the choir to such a high state of efficiency, and the event calls for hearty congratulation to the genial secretary of the Society, Mr. James B. Clark, and his colleagues in the management.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

On April 11 Bach's motet No. 6 for voices and organ, 'Praise the Lord,' and Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' were performed, the Sheffield Musical Union, of which Dr. Coward is the trainer, providing the chorus. The first-named work, which was conducted by Dr. Coward, did not create a great impression, albeit it was finely sung by the famous choralists. Elgar's oratorio was conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, and although some of the tempi were slower than usual, it has to be said that the work has seldom if from Robert Johnson beautiful lyric 'Elëa and chorus were concerned. Londoners are by now familiar with the virtuosity of Dr. Coward's choir, and expect exceptional choral technique. It is enough therefore to record that once again the choir lived up to its reputation. Some, however, would prefer to mitigate the more astonishing than impressive realism of the Demons' chorus. The soloists were Miss Julia Culp, Mr. Felix Senius and Mr. Herbert Brown. Inasmuch as Elgar's oratorio has gained acceptance on the Continent, it was interesting to learn how the first two foreign artists had assimilated the poem and the music. Both sang with the greatest earnestness, Miss Culp especially distinguishing herself. Mr. Senius's difficulty in pronouncing English was some hindrance, and although his performance was very emotional, it cannot be said that he vented the peculiar awesomeness of Gerontius's part. Mr. Herbert Brown sang the parts of the Priest and the Angel of the Agony with fine effect. He has become a reliable artist.

The directors announce that owing to the success of the Choral Concerts, they have arranged to import the Hanley Choir, which is trained by Mr. John James, the Leeds Choral Union and the Sheffield Choir, both of which are trained by Dr. Coward. When will London retaliate?

CONCERTS OF BRITISH MUSIC.

Mr. Cyril Scott is one of our younger composers who possess the valuable distinction of individuality, and consequently importance attached to the concert of his own compositions which be gave on March 24 at Bechstein Hall. The programme consisted largely of songs, several of them pleasing examples of the alliance of words and music. Of these there may be mentioned 'Prelude,' 'A roundel of rest,' and 'Love's quarrel,' all of which were charmingly sung by Mrs. George Swinton, while 'The white Knight' was admirably rendered by Mr. Theodore Byard. Anticipation was chiefly centred in the first public performances of a String quartet (Op. 28), and a Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 59). Making all allowance for modern licence in form and harmonic transitions, neither of these works can be termed satisfactory. That the thematic material should be lacking in significance would not so greatly matter, were the treatment clear and coherent, but the object of the composer would seem to be an intense desire to express torturing and unpleasant thoughts, and moreover to express them in an unpleasant manner. The Quartet was played by the Mesdames Nora Clench, Lucy Stone, Cecilia Gates and Edith Evans, and the Sonata by Madame Ethel Barns and Mr. Cyril Scott.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke gave his second concert this season of British music at the Salle Erard on March 27, when several novelties were produced. These included a Fantasia for strings by F. Kessler, a 'Cycle quartet' of unpretentious kind by Edith Swepstone, and an effective set of Variations on an original theme by T. F. Dunhill. Mr. Holbrooke also introduced five short and significant pianoforte pieces entitled 'Impressions,' by H. V. Jervis-Read, which merit the attention of amateurs, and a rhapsodical 'Poem' for the pianoforte by E. Austin. The concert-giver's own talent was exhibited in four songs severally entitled 'A lake and a fairy boat,' 'Come not,' 'Come, let us make love deathless,' and 'A voice,' which had the advantage of being sung by Miss Perceval Allen.

It was a courteous act on the part of Mr. Ferencz Hegedüs to supplement on April 10 his three violin recitals at .f.olian Hall by a chamber concert devoted to works by British composers. The programme was comprehensive, for it comprised a melodious and tersely written, but little known, Sonata in G minor for violin and pianoforte by John Stanley, the blind organist, who lived from 1713 to 1786; Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Four African dances' (Op. 58), to which full justice was done by the concert-giver and the composer; Parry's bright and expressive Suite in F, No. 2, for violin and pianoforte; and Stanford's 'Irish Fantasias,' severally named 'Caoine' and 'Reel,' for violin solo. This selection was supplemented by a number of songs ranging from Robert Johnson's 'As I walked' to Albert Mallinson's beautiful lyric 'Elëanor,' which were sung with artistic discrimination by Mr. Frederick Keel.

Dr. Walford Davies is announced to give two lectures on May 30 and June 6, at 3 p.m.—at the Royal Institution, the subject of his discourses being 'The art of Bach and future developments.'

NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

At the concert given on March 31 the programme included the tone-poem 'Love among the ruins,' by included the tone-poem 'Love among the runns, by Mr. W. H. Bell, and an English rhapsody for orchestra, 'Brigg Fair,' by Mr. Frederick Delius. The first-named piece, which displayed Mr. Bell's imaginative powers to much advantage, is very fully orchestrated and of considerable length. The climax is finely conceived and the work generally exhibits power. Much interest was taken in the production of Mr. Delius's work, which is in the form of variations and commentary on the fine folk-tune 'Brigg Fair,' discovered by Mr. Percy Grainger at Brigg. The general tone of the music is pastoral and meditative, and the harmonic treatment is very modern. A climax, in which bells took part, was somewhat trying to the ears, but at least the passage served as a foil to the beautiful quieter sections. It is reasonable to hope that many other opportunities will be afforded of hearing so important a work. Mr. Ernest Lengyel played the C minor Pianoforte concerto of Mozart with charming delicacy and appreciation, and a fine performance of Smetana's deeply impressive symphonic poem 'Sarka' was given. Mr. Thomas Beecham, who conducted, richly deserves the thanks of Metropolitan musicians for his enterprise in producing interesting novelties and performing works too seldom heard.

On April 14 British music was again a feature of the programme. Mr. Norman O'Neill conducted with uncommon ardour his exhibitanting and fanciful overture 'In spring-time,' and Mr. Joseph Holbrooke was represented by one of his most baffling tone-poems 'The Viking,' the poetic basis of which is Longfellow's poem 'The skeleton in armour.' Mr. Holbrooke amazes, dazzles and mercilessly shocks, and yet at the same time presents passages of sheer beauty which compel a willing tribute to the wealth of his resources, mingled with a regret that they are employed so fleetingly.

Four numbers from Mr. Granville Bantock's song-cycle Sappho' were strong attractions of the programme. They Sappho' were strong attractions of the programme. They were sung with breadth and fine expression by Miss Phyllis Lett. The beautiful 'Bridal song' was perhaps the most effective of the series. It may be questioned whether justice is done to Mr. Bantock in selecting from the whole group songs not duly contrasted; but we must be grateful for what we get.

Mr. Frederick Delius's tone-poem 'Paris, the song of a great city' (Impressions of night) having been received with much favour on the occasion of its performance at the concert given on February 26, was repeated by general request. The power and beauty of much of this important work were again apparent, but it was not any easier than before to feel that the peculiar brooding of the music naturally associated itself with the psychologic states induced by a night in Paris, unless indeed the mood of the music is meant to be that of a detached philosophical spectator. Two songs by Strauss and the overture to 'The Flying Dutchman completed the programme, which, with the exception of Mr. O'Neill's overture, was very ably conducted by Mr. Thomas Beecham. Again we have to thank that patriotic musician for his zeal and courage in presenting the best of modern British music.

The date of the second concert was unfortunately omitted in our notice last month (p. 243): it took place on March 11. All the concerts were given at Queen's Hall.

LONDON CHORAL UNIONS.

The District Choral Unions formed by uniting the numerous singing classes that are held during the winter season in connection with the Evening Continuation Schools, have become important factors in the development of the study of choral music in London. Four of these Unions gave their concerts during the week ending April 11. Nearly two thousand choralists took part.

The East London Union concert was given at the People's Palace on April 9. The choir, numbering 300 voices, had been very efficiently trained by Mr. G. Day-Winter. The programme included Sullivan's 'Festival Te Deum' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'The death of Minnehaha.' Both these works were successfully performed. An amateur orchestra, trained in the East London Continuation Schools by Mr. T. Jarvis, played the accompaniments and two orchestral pieces. Miss Daisy Day-Winter was organist, and Mr. V. C. H. Leonard and Mr. H. West were the pianoforte accompanists. The soloists were Madame Alice Motterway and Mr. Frederick Aireton.

The Lambeth Union held its concert in the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on April 10. There were about 200 performers, band and chorus, and Mr. Charles Metcalf conducted. The first part, and selections from the second part of 'St. Paul' (Mendelssohn), were given with considerable success. An important number of the considerable success. An important number of the programme was the fine chorus 'The Challenge of Thor' (Elgar). The orchestra, led by Mr. Frank Nicholls, gave a good performance of the overture to 'Der Freischütz.' soloists were Miss Mabel Manson, Madame Cecile Vicars, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, Mr. Dan Price and Mr. W. R. Simmons.

At the Battersea, Clapham and Wandsworth Union concert, which was given at Battersea Town Hall on April 10, the programme included selections from Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' Coleridge Taylor's 'The death of Minnehaha' (complete), selections from Gounod's 'Faust' and the Three Dances from 'Henry VIII.' and Coronation March by Edward German. The soloists were Miss Florence Holderness and Messrs. Frank Webster and Lyell Johnston. The choir numbered nearly 300 singers, supported by an orchestra of forty players. The choral performances, especially in the part-songs, gave evidence of careful rehearsal, and the volume and quality of tone were good. Mr. George Lane showed himself an alert and efficient conductor. Mr. Stanton Rees played some violin solos with great feeling and executive skill. A large audience assembled and showed considerable appreciation of the concert, which was the fifth given by this excellent choral force in South London.

The largest of the Unions is that formed for North-East London. The concert of this well-managed organization was given at the Alexandra Palace on April 11. The choir numbered over 900 voices, and there was a large band and an immense audience. The programme included Sullivan's Festival Te Deum and Coleridge-Taylor's 'The death of Minnehaba.' Both works were effectively performed under the experienced direction of Mr. Allen Gill. The tone of the sopranos was especially good, and the singing generally afforded gratifying proof of the excellence of the material from which no doubt the best metropolitan choral material from which no doubt the best metropolitan choral unions will be recruited. Madame Alice Motterway, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Herbert Parke were the soloists, and Mr. G. C. Richardson officiated at the organ. Three other Unions will give their concerts in May: West London, Queen's Hall, May 21, conductor, Mr. W. T. Oke; S.E. London, Great Central Hall, Bermondsey, May 9, conductor, Mr. Arthur G. Gibbs; N.W. London, Northern Polytechnic Institute, Holloway Road, May 2, conductor, Mr. H. P. Dakin.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Mr. Allen Gill and the members of his Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society found a splendid outlet for their enthusiasm on March 28 in a highly creditable performance of Bach's B minor Mass. The building itself and the arrangement of the orchestra are against an ideal rendering of a work of such concentrated and—may we add?—consecrated beauty. Yet for all that, conductor, singers and players united in giving an impressive rendering of that glorious choral creation. As one number followed another, the choir seemed to improve in tone and precision—the tenors were rather throaty at first-and when the glorious Sanctus was reached, massiveness and resonance were united in stately strains of full-voiced exultation. Finer choral singing is not heard in or near London than on Muswell Hill, and it only needs that the band shall be improved, especially with additional bass instruments (strings), in order to bring the players nearer to the plane of perfection attained by the choir.

The soloists—Miss Betty Booker, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Francis Harford—did their work well. Mr. Harford-who, by the way, sang the bass solos in two performances of the work within five days—achieved his greatest success in 'Quoniam tu solus.' The horn obbligato to this air was ably played by Mr. A. Braine. Mr. G. D. Cunningham presided at the organ and Mr. Allen Gill infused his enthusiasm into his forces by conducting with unsparing energy and an intuitiveness worthy of all praise. The programme-book was prefaced by a short account of 'Bach's Music in England,' summarized from the articles bearing that title which appeared in The MUSICAL TIMES from September to December, 1896.

SOUTH LONDON CHORAL ASSOCIATION.
